

ROLL, JORDAN, ROLL.

A Methodist M.P., on the "Fighting" Tories of Ulster.

Their Threats all Bunkum—Landlords Advised to Stay in the Country and, Like Other People, Make the Best of It.

A London cablegram says: During the debate in the House of Commons, on Thursday night, a lively speech was made by Mr. Jordan, the Nationalist member for West Clare. Mr. Jordan, who is a prominent member of the Methodist church, lives at Eniskillen, in the Town Hall of which hang the banners taken at the battle of the Boyne, and where, nearly two hundred years ago, occurred the famous battle. Mr. Jordan is a tenant farmer, as well as being engaged in trade. One sees in his eyes a reservoir of ready humor, and this overpowered when, rising late in the debate, he said: "I have lived all my life among the Ulster peasantry. I hear it contended that this Bill places the Protestant population of the North under the control of a Parliament elected by the National League. Those who argue thus seem to forget the nature and constituent elements of an Irish Parliament. It would not be a Parnellite Parliament, and the National League, having answered its purpose, would, in the natural order of things, dissolve. (Cheers.) The members would not be elected on any question as to separation, but Irish issues, and the provisions as to the two orders would afford ample security. It was said," the speaker continued, "that the Protestant people would have to leave Ireland, but they might go further and fare worse. Why should the landlords leave the country if their incomes were diminished by half? They would not find any country so cheap as Ireland to live in—(laughter)—and they would still have their demesnes, but all the talk about leaving Ireland was nonsense. If even an outrageous Orangeman was asked whether he was getting ready to go he answered with a twinkle in his eye 'Not yet.' (Laughter.) The people had no notion of going, and the more they assured these Orangemen in the North of Ireland of their safety the greater noise they kicked up. He did not believe that they had any fear for their lives, their liberties or their property. As to their religion, property was a very large part of it. They prayed alternately to Providence and to the noble Lord Randolph Churchill, the member for Paddington. (Laughter.) One could not tell whether they put their trust in God, or in the great Tory party, or in powder and ball, because they used the phrases indiscriminately. (Laughter.) Protestant ladies and farmers' wives said they had no fear, and why should the stalwart majors and military men pretend to be more apprehensive?"

ANGER, NOT FEAR.

The truth was that it was passion and not fear which actuated them. Those people had been pampered all their lives. They had enjoyed ascendancy and monopolized place and power, and they did not wish now to be put on an equality with the other people. The loyal minority, as they were called, were enraged because they would have to go into competitive examination with their Roman Catholic countrymen and get only their fair share of anything that was going. (A laugh.) If, however, the Bill became a law he was satisfied that they would be quite prepared, from the greatest to the least among them, to make the best of it.

If there was discontent or disloyalty it was landlordism alone that incited the feeling. It was against paying tribute to England and Orangemen of Ulster would fight, and if they would fight against paying that tribute to England, why, it would be all right. (Laughter.) A very worthy minister had said that it would be unjust to send English and Scotch soldiers to shoot the Ulster farmers because they would not pay the tax, but they must do so, otherwise the loyal minority would not pay up. (Laughter.)

THE QUESTION IS, WOULD THESE ORANGEMEN REALLY FIGHT? (Laughter and cries of "No.") Of course they would not. They had no notion of fighting. (Laughter.) The honorable member for Southern Belfast—Mr. William Johnston—reminded him of a vision in the Apocalypse—going about like an angel with the Bible under one wing and a rifle under the other. (Laughter.) I never could quite understand whether the honorable member was going in for death or for glory. (Laughter.) The Ulster Conservatives never could tell whether they were going to be lieutenants, captains or majors in the new Ulster army. (Laughter.)

AGAINST THE QUEEN'S ARMY.

If they intended fighting they would want arms, ammunition, a commissariat and a medical department, and then they would have to borrow an English general—(laughter)—and when all was ready they would have to fight the Queen's army. (Laughter.) The fact was that these men did not intend to fight at all and that their defiant language was mere bunkum. (Laughter.) "I never objected to what was fair rent. I have been consulted by thousands of tenants, and have never given advice which I should feel ashamed to see placed before this House. I deny that the Methodists of Ireland are antagonistic against the Bill. I admit that a majority of them are antagonistic, but here, as with the Presbyterians, there is a thinking and growing minority in favor of Home Rule. I have letters in my pocket from Presbyterians who have changed their views since the last election. I urge the House to give a large measure of Home Rule, and not to repeat the blunders of the land legislation by giving bare measures, which would only keep the agitation alive."

Ballet.

We regret to have to announce the death of John Little, who died suddenly May 23rd. Deceased was a young man aged twenty-six, unmarried and highly esteemed by all who knew him. He died after only twenty-four hours' sickness. His parents and friends have the entire sympathy of the community at large.
