No Limit to Ships' Size.

Titanic Would Have Sunk Sooner If

Philadelphia, May 25.-The twelfth International Congress of Navigation to-day declared to go on record as favoring a limit being placed on the size of ocean steamships. During the debate on the subject it was declared that the Titanic disaster was not due to the size of the ship, but that on the other hand its immense proportions had kept the vessel from sinking quicker. A smaller steamship having met a similiar accident, it is argued, would have sunk like a stone. It was further declared that the recent great marine tragedy would have no appreciable effect on limiting the size of vessels, and it was asserted that the time is not far off when the Panama Canal will be too small to permit the safe passage of the great ships of the future.

Darrow Will Tell All.

Chicago, May 27 .- Overtures look-Clarence S. Darrow, on trial at Los Angeles on a charge of jury bribing. have been made to the district attor ney there and repulsed unless M Darrow agrees to tell everything he knows in connection with the McNamara plot to blow up the Los Angeles Times building, according to a sensational statement made by General Harrison G. Otis, publisher of the Los Angeles Times, who is in Chicago on his way west.

"I personally know that overtures 'or a confession have been made,' said General Otis at the Blackstone Hotel to a reporter for the Daily News to-day.

"The district attorney sent word to Mr. Darrow that his confession would where the delay comes in. Darrow will eitner be convicted or confess inside of two months, and he may confess within a week."

General Otis, who has been in the east on a business trip, says that he has kept in close touch with the Darrow situation and declares that there can be no question about the results of the trial.

"They have the goods on Darrow ie knows it and would like to confess and get out as quickly as possible, said he.

"What the district attorney wants, though, is to get the man who employed Darrow. He wants Darrow to reveal everything in connection with the conspiracy to free the McNamaras. Prominent labor leaders were with Darrow and he will not be allowed to confess unless he tells just what part they took in the jury bribing conspiracy. I believe that he will confess. He is sure to be convicted in any event."

INDECISION.

By WALT MASON.

Old Jasper can't make up his mind: he looks before, he looks behind and springs a grist of hems and haws and quotes a string of ancient saws, and asks advice from Dick and Tom, and gets no benefit therefrom. He's always on the ragged edge; he makes a plan, and then he'll hedge, discard it for another plan, and then on that he'll tie the can. When Jasper started his career propitious gods were smiling near; he had more chances to succeed than any sway-backed mortals need; but always he would hem and haw, and shy at bogies made of straw, and pause to read the book of rules, and manufacture obstacules. And Jasper, as we go to press, is snorting round in great distress. He's been abandoned by his frau; the sheriff levied on his cow; he has no place to sleep or eat; the coppers shoo him from the street. "I never had no luck" he cries, and with his whiskers wipes his eyes. "By all the fates I've been accurst; the world has kicked me from the first." I see lots more, from day to day, all headed down the same old way. The lane of indecision goes into a region rank
