PROVIDES MANY BIRDS FOR HOSPITALS.

THETFORD, Eng.—With 4,000 partridges and pheasants falling before the King and several other titled guns, the first of His Majesty's three days' hunting over the preserves of Lord Iveagh, was not so bad. From the well stocked covers the birds rose well and the King had a large proportion of the bag to his credit. It is customary to donate most of such kills to hospitals and charitable institutions.

The King left London to visit the Earl of Iveagh, who, notwithstanding his 78 years is an enthusiastic hunter and provides all the luxuries for his guests. His preserves cover thousands of acres of land. Among the other sportsmen who took part in the hunt were the Earl of Albemarle and Lord Claude Hamilton.

China's Tariffs

POWERS CONCEDE HER CLAIM TO AUTONOMY.

PEKING, Nov. 4.—The Powers represented at the conference here on the proposal that there should be autonomy for the Chinese Customs tariff have agreed that this claim should be conceded under certain conditions.

The Japanese and American delegates supported the claim, and the representatives of the other Powers expressed the desire to meet China's wishes generously.

The proposed 2½ p.c. surtax. The proposals put forward by the American delegation included the following:

The Powers shall authorize the levying of a surtax of 2½ p.c. on all goods from February 1, 1926, and a schedule of luxuries shall be prepared on which a tax of 5 p.c. shall be effective not later than July 1, 1926.

Provisions shall be made for the levying of the full amount of these surtaxes at the land frontiers, and a new treaty drawn up which shall provide that three months after the treaty is concluded the Chinese Government, until tariff autonomy has become effective, shall be at liberty to impose a new, uniformly enforced schedule of duties at rates from 5 to 15½ p.c. on imports, and 5 to 7½ p.c. on exports.

Likin (provincial transit duty) and related internal taxes shall be abolished.

Subject to the fulfilment of the provisions, the present treaty restrictions shall cease and a national tariff shall come into force on January 1, 1929. It proposed by a majority of the contracting Powers before January 1, 1928, a conference of the Powers shall be convened on May 1, 1928, to decide whether "Hikin" has been abolished and for the purpose of negotiating any further agreements that may be needed.

Natives Refuse to Surrender Liquor

Object to Mandate Powers Imposing Prohibition on Them.

GENEVA, Nov. 18.—Prohibition has gone on the rocks of self-determination and equal rights in many of the mandate areas parcelled out by the League of Nations to the various colonial powers. The fond hope of dry advocates that the educational process under way among the native populations would succeed in inculcating the principles of abstemious living are doomed to disappointment.

"We want our liquor," is the sentiment expressed by native voices from all parts of the globe. It really is not liquor that is so much desired as equality, or the privilege at least of self-determination with regard to beverages.

For a mandatory power to impose on the natives of the various mandate areas a prohibition regime while the power itself permits the sale and consumption of liquor back home is, discrimination scarcely in harmony, the natives believe, with the high principles of equality upon which the mandates were to have been administered.

The most emphatic protests of this sort have come from the populations of the Pacific islands under Australian or New Zealand mandates. The same sentiment, however, is almost universally found elsewhere. As a consequence the Permanent Mandates Committee of the League has been obliged to adopt a system of control in place of prohibition. The control becomes less severe in direct ratio to the advancement of the particular mandate population.

The American "Fat Boy"

There is a curious absence of humour and also of dignity in the attitude of some responsible Americans towards the British rubber industry if seen in public utterances are correctly related. Not for the first time, we find Mr. Herbert Hoover, United States Secretary of Commerce, enjoining the fat boy in an endeavour to make our flesh creep. This time it is in a speech at the Erie Chamber of Commerce, in which Mr. Hoover is alleged to have said that the policy of foreign goods in aiding combinations which control the production and prices of several essential commodities must eventually cause the United States to retaliate. British rubber and Brazilian coffee were specially cited, but silk, nitrates, potash, quinine, iodine, tin and other commodities apparently also come under the ban. The development of such policies will, it is said, affect economic and political relations, and create "malicious currents of international ill-will." The suggested retaliation can apparently take the form of restriction of credits to countries controlling commodities, which would mean a trade war, or the revision of anti-trust legislation to permit combinations of buyers in self-defence.

Let us hope we still retain a sense of humour on this side of the Atlantic. Does Mr. Hoover know that no combination of rubber-growers exists? On the contrary, it has often been a complaint that while buyers of rubber often acted as if they were, let us say, organized, rubber growers have often competed with each other in selling.

Is Mr. Hoover aware of his own country's high protective tariffs? "Malignant currents of ill-will," would certainly be deplorable, but hardly seem justified by the fact that certain American manufacturers, through their own misadventure, have for once got the worst of a purely commercial bargain.—Truth.
