visible body, but also an invisible soul. The soul of the church is as old as Abel and as wide as the race of mankind. It embraces every soul of man who his lived, or at least who has died, in union with God by the indwelling of the Holy Ghost. Nearly 30 years ago I published all this in answer to my friend, the late Dr. Pusey, in a letter on 'The Workings of the Spirit in the Church of England.' This letter has been lately reprinted by Messrs. Eurns & Oates. Thus far, then, I can lay a basis on which to write and to hope with all your contributors. We believe that the Holy Ghost breathes throughout the world, and gathers into union with God and to eternal life all those who faithfully co-operate with his light and grace. None are responsible for dying inculpably out of the visible body of the church. They only are culpable who knowingly and wifully reject its divine voice when sufficiently known to them. But I must not go on for you are seeking union in agreements, and I have no will to strike a discordant note. You say truly 'the controversies to which most of our churches owe their rise have lost much of their interest for us; some of them are hardly intelligible.'

"I have two great advantages. I can hope and embrace you in the soul of the church, and I can rejoice in all, and gladly share in many of your good works."

Lighting Up the Cave.

Among the lately discovered wonders of Tasmania are some large and beautiful caverns, near the town of Southport. While these caves have been explored for less than a mile, it is believed that they extend several miles underground. They contain large chambers ornamented with splendid stalactites and stalagmites.

One of the most interesting facts about them is reported by a recent visitor, who says that when the lights carried by the explorers were extinguished, the ceilings and sides of the caverns seemed to be studded with diamonds! This was found to be due to the presence of millions of and sides of the caveras seemed to be studded with diamonds! This was found to be due to the presence of millions of glow-worms.

It is known that the phosphorescent light of the glow-worm is emitted only by the female insects, which are wingless, while the males, being provided with wings, lack the power of making light. Naturalists formerly explained the exercise of this strange power by the female glow-worms as an effort to attract the attention of the males, or literally to shine in their eyes.

Of late, however, the explanation has been advocated by Mr. Wallace and others that glow-worms shine in order to save themselves from capture by animals, such as birds, which feed upon insects. These animals have learned by experience that glow-worms are not good food, and accordingly avoid them when their light enables them to be recognized.

ingly avoid them when their light enables them to be recognized.

But is it for such a purpose that the glow-worms light their diamond lamps in the caves of Tasmania? If those caves are also inhabited by many insect-feeding animals, the answer may be yes; but in the absence of information as to the existence of such animals, it would seem to be more interesting, at any rate, to adopt in this case the other view, namely, that the glow-worms shine to give light to members of their own race. And if so, what a little wonder-world they have there in the darkness of those underground chambers!

With the strength possible only in moments of extreme excitement, the miner clung with one hand to a limb of the tree, and with the other steadled his gun and fired at the brute. Alarmed if not wounded, the bear let go his hold and dropped to the ground.

A minute later, however, it was climbing the tree, and when the miner attempted to strike it with his gun, the infuriated brute seized the weapon with teetn and claws, and wrenched it out of his grasp. Then the bear began climbing again, but the man kicked it in the snout with his uninjured leg with such effect that the creature lost its hold, and turned a complete summersult to the ground.

The bear was soon on its feet, but after tearing in pieces the man's hat, which lay at the foot of the tree retired from the scene as if he had grown tired of the fray.

The miner waited for some time, and then seeing nothing of his enemy and thinking the danger over, descended from the tree. He had not advanced a dozen tods before the grizzly made a second assault upon him, and this time with fatal result.

The whole scene was witnessed by an un-

How it is Non-Catholios Go to Heaven.

Cardinal Manning in the Review of the Churches explains for the satisfaction of the reunionists of Christendom how it is that the Catholic Church admits non-Catholios can be saved. It is owing to "the Catholic doctrine of the university of grace. They presuppose the doctrine of the visible church, which has not only a visible body, but also an invisible soul. CHARLES HUGHES,

A Montreal Lumber Merchant, Attacked on the Public Streets!

on the Public Streets!

A Montreal lumber merchant, Mr. Chas.
Hughes, has had the misfortune of being attacked at various times on the streets of that city. Mr. Hughes is an estimable gentleman, well known as a prominent business man, and highly respected by all who have had the privilege of his acquaintance.

Says I to myself, "That sermon's pat,
But man's a queer creation,
And I'm much afraid that most of the folks
Won't see the application.

business man, and highly respected by all who have had the privilege of his acquaintance.

At first sight it seems almost beyond comprehension that Mr. Hughes should have personal enemies, that would encompass him, work evil, and even resort to bodily injury. The facts, however, prove conclusively that the attacks referred to were extremely serious, and that Mr. Hughes' life was in positive danger on several occasions.

Business men of Mr. Hughes' high standing and character are often obliged to take great precautions, so that they may avoid the treacherous foes that would attack them even in the clear brightness of day on our public streets and thoroughfares.

Many of our estimable and honored citizens have foes in human form, who are actuated by jealousy, envy and malice. We know, from long experience, that thousands of our Canadian business and professional men are daily beset by foes, which are more to be dreaded than the armed assassin, or the enemy who stealthily hides in the cover of darkness for his victim. These deadly foes are unseen and invisible when they commence their subtle and nefarious work; and it requires the utmost care, vigilance and attention, so that the person attacked may cope successfully with them.

Mr. Hughes, unfortunately, had fallen into the unpitying grasp of these death-dealing enemies, and for three years was almost at their mercy. Mr. Hughes best describes his position in his letter; he vividly pictures his severe sufferings and his efforts to get rid of them; and then in joy he tells us of his triumph and victory as follows:

Attacked by a Grizzly.

In Macdonald's "British Columbia" there is a story of a miner who had dismounted from his mule in a small canon to eat his lunch. He had filled his canteen with water from the stream and had seated himself under a small tree, when suddenly he saw a grizzly bear only a few yards distant and slowly, approaching.

The surprised traveler made haste to climb a tree, taking his gun with him. This movement seemed to excite the grizzly, for it bounded forward and before the man was quite beyond reach seized his leg in its mouth.

CHARLES HUGHES,

Lumber Merchant.

Can the statements of any gentleman be more carnest, forcible or convincing? This honest letter, written by Mr. Hughes, is given only with a view of benefitting itners in our fair Canada. Its object is not he seeking of fame, publicity and renown. The writer is simply filled with a true defire to communicate to others the gladussage that there exists a remedy, known as Paine's Celery Compound, which gives o all who use it new strength, perfect eath, renewed activity and untold blessags, even after dectors have failed and ther remedies have proved usoless.

It seems unnecessary to urge at greater meth upon all sufferers the necessity of king hold of this great and valuable reparation, after the strong testimony given by Mr. Hughes, Scores of our best id most worthy people are daily sending isimilar testimony to Mr. Hughes; and emay safely assert, without fear of conadiction, that no other remedy known to madians enjoys the same extended may be asked, with great seriousness and lemnity—why will our suffering people sitate and longer doubt, and why why the peculiar enervating effect of summer Ate and Drank.

David Hume, after retiring from public lite in 1769, devoted himself to cooking, as the science to which I intend to addict the remaining years of my life. I have hat now lying on the table before mea sceipt for making soupe a la reine, copied with my own hand; for befand cabbage, a ciarming dish, nobody excels me. I make as o sheep's broth in a manner that Mr. Reith speaks of for eight days after, and lie Due de Nivernois would blind himself siprentice to my lass to learn it."

Gibbon was extremely fond of madeirs, and declared that it was essential to his "lealth and reputation," he would always gatify his taste for it, in spite of the protects of his physicians. It is one of the saidest privileges of the doctor's profession the salets privileges of the doctor's profession the valets, to learn more of the weakness than the heroism of his employers. Some hurs before his death, Gibbon picked a sag of chicken and drank three glasses of he favorite wine, which testifies to the

OUR MINISTER'S SERMON.

The minister said last night, said he,
"Don't be afraid of givin'.
If your life ain't worth nothin' to other folks,

Why, what's the use of livin'?"
And that's what I said to my wife, says I,
"There's Brown, the miser'ble sinner,
He'd sooner a beggar would starve than give
A cent towards buyin' a dinner."

I tell you our minister's prime, he is; When I heard him a-givin' it right and left,

Just who was hit by his sermon. Just who was hit by his sermon.

Of course there couldn't be no mistake

When he talked of long winded prayin,

For Peters and Johnson they sot and scowled

At every word he was sayin'.

And the minister he went on to say,

"There's various kinds of cheatin',
And religion's as good for every day
As it is to bring to meetin'.
I don't think much for the man that gives

A loud 'Amen' at preachin',
And spends his time the followin' week
In cheatin' and over-reachin'."

I gues the dose was bitter enough
For a man like Jones to swaller,
For I noticed he didn't open his mouth
But once after that to holler.
"Hurrah!" says I, "for the minister,"
(Of course I said it quiet)
"Give us some more of this open talk;
It's very refreshin' diet."

And I guess it sot her thinkin'.

The minister hit 'em every time;
And when he spoke of fashion,
And riggin's out in bows and things
As woman's rulin' passion.
And comin' to church to see the styles,
I couldn't help a winkin'
And a-nudgin' my wife, and says I, "fhat's
you,

My wife she nudged, and Brown he winked, And there was lots of smilin', And lots of looking at our pew;

It sat my blood a-bilin'. Says I to myself, "Our minister Is gittin' a little bitter;
