A STEERING HEART.

CHAPTER XIX. Madame Marton instantly flew into a passion.

"You refuse to obey me!" she angrily cried.

"Not in anything that will not violate my conscience," she said quietly.

"You are here to serve me."

"Yes, in whatever is right."

"And you absolutely refuse to go down and excuse me to Mr. Sandland?"

"No, I will gladly do that if you desire," said Shirley, looking relieved.

"I will say that you do not feel like seeing her today, but I cannot tell that you are not at home. I cannot speak falsely for anyone," she concluded with quiet decision.

There was a moment of silence. Then Madame said in a terrible voice—terrible because it was so deadly calm from passion:

"You will do as I tell you, or—"

"I cannot, even though you send me from you," Shirley replied, more brightly than before, as she paused, too excited to go on.

"Then lifting her clear eyes to the angry woman's face she continued, appealingly: "Madame Marton, pray stop and think a moment; do you wish me to tell this to Mr. Sandland?"

Madame started at the obvious word, and her face and her eyes were dyed with a flush of shame and anger.

She stood as if fascinated by the girl's gaze for a moment, then turning abruptly away she left the room without a word and went downstairs to receive her caller.

Shirley went slowly across the hall to her room, feeling greatly depressed over the recent exciting interview with Madame Marton. She was indignant also over the fact that she had been requested to take a message of such a deceptive character to any one.

"Oh, dear!" she sighed, as she opened the door and her eyes fell on the new rug, "why must this disagreeable affair happen just after she had been so good to me?" she said to herself.

"I will not remain to violate either my conscience or my self-respect—she will feel that her money has been spent for naught."

She dreaded to meet the woman again, for she feared that she would be so angry and unreasonable, because she had dared to openly oppose her, that she would at once dismiss her, and the thought of going back to hot, dusty New York, with Clifton away, was not an inviting prospect.

If she had but known that Madame Marton had been so angry, she would have even more than she mourned over such a possibility she would have been greatly cheered in the thought of how necessary she had become to her.

Madame was indeed, fast experiencing a deep attachment for her new and charming companion, although she would have scorned to own the fact to any one, and took considerable pains to conceal from those around her, but it had been a great departure for her to go off by herself and purchase the rug, and the girl a pleasant surprise. She had never been known to do such a thing before, while the other innovations which she was contemplating were likely to paralyze her household with astonishment when they should be discovered.

However enraged she might have been at the time of Shirley's refusal to take her false message to Mrs. Sandland, she appeared to have entirely recovered from her violent mood when she met her at supper-time, and the subject was not referred to by either of them.

This was a great relief to Shirley, and she was even more astonished when the next morning Madame commanded her to get the rug and carry it to the shipping expedition to Quebec.

They started forth on the most amicable terms, and Shirley gratefully accepted the situation, and exerted herself to be agreeable to her employer.

Upon arriving at the carpet store in Quebec a handsome rug was selected for the drawing room, and then Madame decided that she would have a carpet for the dining room and a couple for the hall, then some draperies were added to the other purchases, and Shirley, upon making a rude estimate, was amazed to find that the woman had spent more than ten pounds.

"I hope you will not hold me responsible for having led you into this extravagance," she said, with a blush, as she flushed sensitively when Madame called upon her to decide between the patterns of two sets of expensive draperies which were spread out before her.

"You just see me alone," the strange woman retorted sharply, "but I'll naturally: 'I won't have my place meddled with by my company, let all the world see me alone, and I'm not going to have the only attractive room in the house.'"

Shirley said no more, but though secretly delighted to have these beautiful things added to her home, she hardly knew how to take Madame in this unusual mood.

On their return from their shopping expedition Shirley carried a small, quaintly shaped basket containing a great bunch of long-stemmed roses of various kinds, together with a bouquet of the most beautiful pansies she had ever seen.

She reached to the handle of the basket there was a card, upon which was simply written, "Compliments of Nell Wallace."

"How kind of her to delight me!" she said, her face all aglow with pleasure, and longing to have some one share it with her. She slipped across the hall to Madame's room and set the basket on the table before her, hoping that she would enjoy it also.

"Humph!" granted this peculiar creature, as her glance fell upon the delicate offering, and the accompanying card. Then she suddenly checked herself and remarked indignantly: "Well, I won't call them worthless trash, since they have made your face shine like that, so take them away to your room, and enjoy them to the top of your head."

Shirley's fair hands fluttered among the bright blossoms, or an instant, then selecting the loveliest of them all she broke it from its companion, and bending forward deftly pinned it among the folds of the black lace scarf which Madame wore before she was aware of her intention.

"It was nothing but a rose I gave her. Nothing but a rose." But its rosy heart breathes sweetest savor.

Of any flower that blows."

quoted Shirley, with a flourish twinkle in her eyes as she caught up her basket and danced out of the room without waiting to note the effect of her act.

tried not to mind the smirks and smiles which the sight of it caused among the servants. When she went back to her room again she carefully removed the beautiful bud, and laid it in a tiny box, which she shut away in a bureau drawer, something very like a tender smile wreathing her thin lips while thus engaged.

"Truly, for once, the 'leopard' seemed likely to 'change his spots.' The next few weeks passed pleasantly to Shirley, or at least they would have been delightful if she had not been secretly agonized over the sudden cessation of Clifton's letters.

She continued to write to him, however, and tried to be contented with the mails, but as time passed and she still heard not a word she grew distressed and even alarmed.

It was totally foreign to her nature to be suspicious, and she refused to doubt his fidelity; but she would not understand her lover's long-continued silence, and had not met for more than two years, more than humanly she had at last experienced something of wounded feeling and even indignation over having her many letters ignored.

This, after a time, she ceased writing to him, and she would not understand her lover's long-continued silence, and had not met for more than two years, more than humanly she had at last experienced something of wounded feeling and even indignation over having her many letters ignored.

Madame Marton, having once instituted a new departure, would not be satisfied with having done anything, she made thorough work of beautifying her home.

It was strange to see how she consulted Shirley, and asked to be of almost all points which required taste and skill in arrangement; and by the end of a month from the next day when the young girl had surprised her with the changes in her own room, the grand old mansion presented a different appearance from what it had worn when they arrived from New York.

There were bright rugs scattered all about, while rich and beautiful draperies hung from the ceilings and windows.

The pictures also had been rearranged—some of them newly framed—and with a better regard for light and shade. The costly bric-a-brac Shirley disposed of to the best advantage, and the elegant vases were constantly filled with flowers, which shed brightness and fragrance throughout the house.

Many of these came from the conservatories of Lord Wallace, who now scarcely had time in sending a fine variety to either Madame or her young companion.

He had called at the mansion a few days after his meeting with her in the wood, bringing his mother with him, for he had persuaded her that she owed their neighbor a call, and he wished her to meet the young girl who had charmed him so much.

While Lady Wallace and Madame were renewing their acquaintance—for they had not met for more than two years, except as they passed each other in driving—the young lord devoted himself to the entertainment of Shirley, who appeared to become more and more interested.

That he made some excuses to come to the mansion almost every day. Sometimes it was to bring Madame some of the best produce from the domain of early garden produce. Again, it would be a new variety of fern, which he had received from some of the nobles of the late-blossomed orchid to show to and discuss with Shirley, while it was a source of great delight to him to witness her lovely face glow and sparkle as she received the basket of flowers which he never failed to bring.

About a week after Lady Wallace's call Madame and Shirley went to Ivyhill to return the courtesy of the week before, and then our fair heroine had the much-wished-for opportunity to go through the conservatories, where Lord Wallace had pointed out to her on the previous occasion, and the flower of which Madame had told her were devoted to such noble purposes.

CHARGE AGAINST A PALMIST.

Calgary, N. W. T., April 28.—A case of considerable interest was concluded in the police court here, when the charge against Madame Rieco, palmist, for telling fortunes, was dismissed.

The chief of police went to her room at a hotel and had his hand read, being told that he would die more than a year hence, of pleurisy then consumption, and he arrested her.

After hearing the evidence the magistrate read the advice to the accused, and she was released.

GREAT IS FRISK. If anyone ever doubted the ability of Emil Frisk, the ex-Canadian Leaguer, to both pitch the ball and hit it when occasion required, let him stand forth in the false prophet class.

In the opening game of the American League at Detroit, on Thursday, Miller, who has been looked upon as Detroit's star pitcher, was put in to win the game from Milwaukee. The eyes of ten thousand Detroit fans were on Miller, and so were the eyes of the visiting batsmen.

He lasted three innings, when Frisk was substituted. Here is the rest of the story as told by the Detroit News: When Miller gave way to Frisk, confidence seemed to be passed along the line, and the playing was kept enough during the rest of the game. Miller thought he would be able to steam the ball over as well as ever, but found so soon as he tried it that he was shy on strength and other requisites. Because of his nerve Miller had been selected to open the season, and unfortunately, this was about the only thing he had with him. Frisk, who took his place, pitched a good game, although he was hit hard in two innings. Had he started off and been supported as he was in the six innings during which he officiated, it is doubtful if Milwaukee would have made half as many runs. During the spring work it has been noticed Dillon is getting back to the batting form which made him great in 1909.

He batted nicely and getting results, and in the opening game he accomplished the rare feat of making four two-base hits, two of them in the ninth inning, and winning the game. He scored three times himself and bat more than half of the Detroit tallies. Elberfeld, Holmes, Gleason, Casey and Frisk also met the ball nicely and with good effect, Frisk hammering out three singles.

Constipation In Spring Time

According to the best medical authorities, fully three-fourths of the people of the civilized world suffer in some form from costiveness or irregular action of the bowels. There is no doubt that many distressing diseases are caused by constipation. Aside from creating impurity of the blood, it gives rise to headaches, piles, foul humors, fevers, debility, etc. Therefore, it is of supreme importance to health that the bowels be kept regular. Simple food, fruit, etc., should be used, and rich food and stimulants of all kinds avoided. This, with the use of Burdock Blood Bitters to regulate the bowels and establish healthy action of the stomach, liver and kidneys, cannot fail to perform a complete cure, even in the most obstinate cases. B.B.B. is a natural remedy for constipation, and its reputation is one of continued success, proved by the overwhelming evidence of thousands of testimonials.

B.B.B. CURES DYSPEPSIA SCROFULA CONSTIPATION

Dyspepsia

Full and proper nutrition depends upon the action of the stomach. If the action of the stomach is wrong, the best of food cannot properly nourish the body, while with a healthy stomach even coarse food furnishes strength and vigor to the body. With good food and good digestion the highest health is obtained, pure blood is formed and disease quickly cast off. The grand secret of life and health rests, therefore, in good digestion making pure blood.

To secure these requisites, the use of B.B.B. is indicated wherever dyspepsia or impure blood is present, and there are but few who do not suffer either occasionally or chronically from these complaints. Prominent symptoms of dyspepsia are variable appetite, faintness, heartburn, sour stomach, nausea, headache, dizziness, fluttering of the heart, coated tongue and bad taste in mouth, costiveness or diarrhoea alternately, low spirits, tired feeling, etc. Burdock Blood Bitters is guaranteed to cure dyspepsia in any form, having cured cases of twenty-five years' standing which had resisted all other treatment.

No other remedy possesses such perfect cleansing, healing and purifying properties as Burdock Blood Bitters. It not only cleanses internally but it heals, when applied externally, all Sores, Ulcers, Abscesses, Scrofulous Sores, Blotches, Eruptions, etc., leaving the skin clean and pure as a babe's. Taken internally, it removes all morbid, effete or waste matter from the system, and thoroughly regulates all the organs of the body, restoring the stomach, liver, bowels and blood to healthy action. In this way the sick become well, the weak strong, and those who have that tired, worn-out feeling receive new vigor and buoyant health and spirits so that they feel like work. If your appetite is poor, your energy gone, your ambition lost, B. B. B. will restore you to the full enjoyment of happy, vigorous life.

Skin Diseases

Many skin diseases, including Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Tetter, Shingles, Eruptions, Scurf, Itching and Burning Rashes, Sores, etc., are caused by bad blood, and their cure depends upon the purification of the vital fluid by the prompt and faithful use of a powerful alternative, blood purifier and tonic like Burdock Blood Bitters. This medicine not only counteracts the poison in the blood but, by unlocking all the secretions, it completely removes all poisonous waste or impure matter from the system. In skin diseases, the use of Burdock Healing Ointment is of value as a soothing application, to exclude the air and hasten the healing process. It is claimed for B.B.B. on unmistakable evidence that it cures all blood diseases from a common pimple to the worst scrofulous sore.

Biliousness

The liver secretes bile, the natural cathartic; it also filters and purifies the blood. When torpid or inactive, the bowels become costive; when too much bile is secreted, the subject becomes bilious and has diarrhoea; when the bile overflows into the blood, we have jaundice, with sallow skin and yellow eyes, Signs of liver complaint: Foul, coated tongue, sleepy, weary feeling, aching shoulders, headache, nausea, irregular bowels, depression of spirits, dull, yellow eyes, bad breath and general prostration, burning feet and hands, etc. Regulate the diet: Take ripe fruit and vegetables, with simple, plain diet; avoid all stimulants; take Burdock Blood Bitters, the great anti-bilious vegetable compound, that acts at once upon the stomach, bowels, liver, kidneys, skin and blood; opens all the sluiceways or outlets of disease, and at the same time strengthens the entire system. Burdock Blood Bitters thus cures even the worst forms of chronic liver complaint, from which relief often seemed impossible. Many thousands of bottles have been used for liver diseases, and we have yet to hear of a single complaint.
