cision.

There was a moment of silence. Then madame said in a terrible voice—terrible because it was so deadly calm from massion:

You will do as I tell you, or-" "I cannot, even though you send me from you," Shirley reiterated more firmly than before, as she paused, too excited to go on. Then lifting her clear eyes to the angry woman's face she continued, appealingly: "Madame Marton, pray stop and think a moment; do you wish me to tell this—lie for you?" Madame started as the obnoxious word smote her ears, and a flush of shame dyed her face and neck.

She stood as if fascinated by the girl's gaze for a moment, then turning abruptly away she left the room without a word and went downstairs to receive her caller.

Shirley went slowly across the hall to her room, feeling greatly depressed over the recent exciting interview with madame. She was indignant also over the fact that she had been requested to take a message of such a deceptive character to any one.

"Oh, dear!" she sighed, as she opened the door and her eyes fell upon the pretty new rug, "why must this disagreeable affair happen just after she had been so good to me? If she sends me away—and I will not remain to violate either my conscience or my self-respect—she will feel that her money has been spent for naught."

feel that her money has been spent for naught."

She dreaded to meet the woman again, for she feared that she would be so angry and unreasonable, because she had dared to openly oppose her, that she would at once dismiss her, and the thought of going back to hot, dusty New York, with Clifton away, was not an inviting prospect one of the had but known that madame dreaded the thought of parting with her even more than she mourned over such a possibility she would have been greatly cheered in thus realizing how necessary she had become to her.

Madame was, indeed, fast experiencing a deep attachment for her bright and charming companion, although she would have scorned to own the fact to any one, and took considerable pains to conceal it from those around her; but it had been a great departure for her to go off by herself and purchase the rug to give the girl a pleasant surprise. She had never been known to do such a thing before, while the other innovations which she been known to do such a thing before, while the other innovations which she was contemplating were likely to paralize her household with astonishment when they should be discovered.

However entaged she might have been at the time of Shirley's refusal to take her false message to Mrs. Sandland, she appeared to have entirely recovered from her violent mood when she met her at supper-time, and the subject was not referred to by either of them.

This was a source of great wonderment to Shirley, and she was even more astonished when the next morning madame commanded her to get ready early for their shopping expedition to Quebec.

They started forth on the most amicable terms, and Shirley gratefully accepted the situation, and exerted herself to be agreeable to her employer.

Upon arriving at the great carpet store to Quebec a handsome rug was selected.

Upon arriving at the great carpet store in Quebec a handsome rug was selected for the drawing room, and then madame decided that she would have another for the dining room and a couple for the hall, then some draperies were added to the other purchases, and Shirley, upon making a rude estimate, was amazed to find that the woman had spent more than

"I hope you will not hold me responsible for having led you into this extravagance," she laughingly remarked, but flushing sensitively when madame called upon her to decide between the patterns of two sets of expensive draperies which were spread out before her

"You just let me alone," the strange—woman retorted sharply, but not illmaturedly; "I won't have my place meddied with; my companion, let me tell you, is not going to have the only attractive room in the house."

So Shiriev said no more, but though secretly delighted to have these beauti-ful things added to their home, she hardly knew how to take madame in this un On their return from their shopping expedition Shirley found upon her table a quaintly shaped basket containing a great bunch of long-stemmed roses of various sinds, together with a mass of the largest and most beautiful pansies she had ever

Attached to the handle of the basket there was a card, upon which was simply written, "Compliments of Neil Wallace."
"How kind!" cried the delighted girl, her face all aglow with pleasure, and longing to have some one share it with her she tripped across the hall to madame's room and set the basket on the table before her, hoping that she would enjoy it also. enjoy it also. "Humph!" grunted this peculiar crea-

"Humph!" grunted this peculiar creature, as her glance fell upon the dainty offering and the accompanying card. Then she suddenly checked herself and remarked indignantly: "Well, I won't call them worthless trash, since they have made your face shine like that, so take them away to your room, child, and enjoy them to the top of your heart." Shirley's fair hands fluttered among the bright blossoms for an instant, then se-quoted Shirley, with a rougish twinkle in her eyes as she caught up her basket and danced out of the room without waiting to note the effect of her act.

Nothing but a rose; But its royal heart breathes sweetest savor Of any flower that blows."

Madame Marton sat looking down upon the flower for several moments, a peculiar expression on her aged face.

"What has come over me?" she mutliar expression on her aged face.

"What has come over me?" she muttered at length, while she shrugged her shoulders impatiently. "There is no fool like an old fool, it is said, and I begin to believe it. Yesterday she kissed me, this morning she wheedled me into spending more than fifty pounds, and now she ends by pinning a rose upon my bosom and making a guy of me."

She lifted her hand as if to snatch the gleaming blossom from its place, then morning she wheedled me into spending more than fifty pounds, and now she ends by pinning a rose upon my bosom and making a guy of me."

She lifted her hand as if to snatch the gleaming blossom from its place, then slowly let it fall again upon her lap.
"Her fingers put it there, and it would be a pitv to hurt her." she mused, "but, Felice Marton, the world must be coming to an end, or you would never let that chit of a girl rule you so."

SOMETHING MORE THAN A PURGATIVE.—To purge is the only effect of many pills now on the market. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are more than a purgative. They strengthen the stomach, where other pills weaken it. They cleanse the blood by regulating the liver and kidneys, and they stimulate where other pill compounds depress. Nothing of an injurious nature, used for merely purgative powers, enters into their composition.

tried not to mind the smirks and smiles which the sight of it caused among the servants; but when she went back to her room again she carefully removed the beautiful bud, and laid it in a tiny box, which she shut away in a bureau drawer, something very like a tender smile wreathing her thin lips while thus engaged.

which she shut away in a bureau drawer, something very like a tender smile wreathing her thin lips wifile thus engaged.

Truly, for once, the "leopard" seemed likely to "change his spots."

The next few weeks passed pleasantly to Shirley, or at least they would have been delightful if she had not been secretly anxious over the sudden cessation of Clifton's letters.

She continued to write to him, however, thinking that the fault might be with the mails, but as time passed and she still heard not a word she grew distressed and even alarmed.

It was totally foreign to her nature to be suspicious, and she refused to doubt his fidelity; but she could not understand her lover's long-continued silence, and she would have been something more than human if she had not at last experienced something of wounded feeling and even of indignation over having her many letters ignored.

Thus, after a time, she ceased writing to him, and tried to be contented with her present duties and surroundings, while she could not fail to be interested in the changes going on around her.

Madame Marton, having once instituted a new departure, would not be satisfied with half-doing anything, so made thorough work of beautifying her home.

It was strange to see how she consulted Shirley, and yielded to her on almost all points which required taste and skill in arrangement; and by the end of a month from the next day when the young girl had surprised her with the changes in her own room, the grand old mansion presented a very different appearance from what it had worn when they arrived from New York.

There were bright rugs scattered all about, while rich and beautiful draperies had been hung at the doors and windows.

The pictures also had been rearranged—some of them newly framed—and with

The pictures also had been rearranged some of them newly framed—and with better regard for light and shade. The ostly bric-a-brac Shirley disposed of to the best advantage, and the elegant vases were constantly filled with flowers, which shed brightness and fragrance throughout the house.

Sometimes it was to bring madame some choice hothouse fruit or a donation of early garden produce. Again, it would be a new variety of fern, which he had received from abroad, or perhaps a lately-blossomed orchid to show to and discuss with Shirley, while it was a source of great delight to him to watch her lovely face glow and sparkle as she received the basket of flowers which he never failed to bring.

CHARGE AGAINST A PALMIST. Calgary, N. W. T., April 29.—A case of considerable interest was concluded in the police court here, when the charge against Madame Rheo, palarist, for telling fortunes, was dismissed. The chief of police went to her room at a hotel and had his hand read, being told that he would be more likely to die of apoplexy than consumption, and he arrested her. After hearing the evidence the magistrate held that she did not under-take to tell fortunes. He pointed out that the evidence showed that she only said lines on the hand indicate that; such and such should be the case, not that such and such will happen.

Constipation

According to the best medical authorities, fully three-fourths of the people of the civilized world suffer in some form from costiveness or irregular action of the bowels. There is no doubt that many distressing diseases are caused by constipation. Aside from creating impurity of the blood, it gives rise to headaches, piles, foul humors, fevers, debility, etc. Therefore, it is of supreme importance to health that the bowels be kept regular. Simple food, fruit, etc., should be used, and rich food and stimulants of all kinds avoided. This, with the use of Burdock Blood Bitters to regulate the bowels and establish healthy action of the stomach, liver and kidneys, cannot fail to perform a complete cure, even in the most obstinate cases. B.B.B. is a natural remedy for constipation, and its reputation is one of continued success, proved by the overwhelming evidence of thousands of testimonials.

Dyspepsia

Full and proper nutrition depends upon the action of the stomach. If the action of the stomach is wrong, the best of food cannot properly nourish the body, while with a healthy stomach even coarse food furnishes strength and vigor to the body. With good food and good digestion the highest health is obtained, pure blood is formed and disease quickly cast off. The grand secret of life and health rests, therefore, in good digestion making pure blood.

To secure these requisites, the use of B.B.B. is indicated wherever dyspepsia or impure blood is present, and there are but few who do not suffer either occasionally or chronically from these complaints. Prominent symptoms of dyspepsia are variable appetite, faintness, heartburn, sour stomach, nausea, headache, dizziness, fluttering of the heart, coated tongue and bad taste in mouth, costiveness or diarrhoea alternately, low spirits, tired feeling, etc. Burdock Blood Bitters is guaranteed to cure dyspepsia in any form, having cured cases of twenty-five years' standing which had resisted all other treatment.

In Spring Time

No other remedy possesses such perfect cleansing, healing and purifying properties as Burdock Blood Bitters. It not only cleanses internally but it heals, when applied externally, all Sores, Ulcers, Abscesses, Scrofulous Sores, Blotches, Eruptions, etc., leaving the skin clean and pure as a babe's. Taken internally, it removes all morbid, effete or waste matter from the system, and thoroughly regulates all the organs of the body, restoring the stomach, liver, bowels and blood to healthy action. In this way the sick become well, the weak strong, and those who have that tired, worn-out feeling receive new vigor and buoyant health and spirits so that they feel like work. If your appetite is poor, your energy gone, your ambition lost, B. B. will restore you to the full enjoyment of happy, vigorous life.

Skin Diseases

Many skin diseases, including Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Tetter, Shingles, Eruptions, Scurf, Itching and Burning Rashes, Sores, etc., are caused by bad blood, and their cure depends upon the purification of the vital fluid by the prompt and faithful use of a powerful alternative, blood purifier and tonic like Burdock Blood Bitters. This medicine not only counteracts the poison in the blood but, by unlocking all the secretions, it completely removes all poisonous waste or impure matter from the system. In skin diseases, the use of Burdock Healing Ointment is of value as a soothing application, to exclude the air and hasten the healing process. It is claimed for B.B.B. on unmistakable evidence that it cures all blood diseases from a common pimple to the worst scrofulous

Biliousness

The liver secretes bile, the natura cathartic; it also filters and purifies the blood. When torpid or inactive, the bowels become costive; when too much bile is secreted, the subject becomes bilious and has diarrhoea; when the bile overflows into the blcod, we have jaundice, with sallow skin and yellow eyes, Signs of liver complaint: Foul, coated tongue, sleepy, weary feeling, aching shoulders, headache, nausea, irregular bowels, depression of spirits, dull, yellow eyes, bad breath and general prostration, burning feet and hands, etc. Regulate the diet: Take ripe fruit and vegetables, with simple, plain diet; avoid all stimulants; take Burdock Blood Bitters, the great anti-bilious vegetable compound, that acts at once upon the stomach, bowels, liver, kidneys, skin and blood; opens all the sluiceways or outlets of disease, and at the same time strengthens the entire system. Burdock Blood Bitters thus cures even the worst forms of chronic liver complaint, from which relief often seemed impossible. Many thousands of bottles have been used for liver diseases, and we have yet to hear of a single com-

BASEBALL. GREAT IS FRISK.

If anyone ever doubted the ability of Emil Frisk, the ex-Canadian Leaguer, to both pitch the ball and hit it when occasion required, let him stand forth in the false prophet class. In the opening game of the American League at Detroit, on Thursday, Miller, who has been looked upon as Detroit's star pitcher, was put in to win the game from Milwaukee. The eyes of ten thousand Detroit fans were en Miller, and so were the eyes of the Milwau-kee batsmen. He lasted three in-nings, when Frisk was substituted. Here is the rest of the story as told by the Detroit News: When Miller gave way to Frisk, confidence seemed to be passed along the line, and the playing was sharp enough during the rest of the game. Miller thought he would be able to steam the ball over as well as ever, but found so soon as he tried it. ever, but found so soon as he tried it that he was shy on strength and other requisites. Because of his nerve Miller had been selected to open the season, and, unfortunately, this was about the only thing he had with him. Frisk, who took his place, pitched a good game, although he was hit hard in two innings. Had he started off and been supported as he was in the six innings during which he officiated, it is doubtful if Milwaukee would have made half as many runs. During the spring work has been noticed Dillon is getting back to the batting form w hich made him great in 1899. He has been meeting the ball nicely and getting results, and in the opening game he accomished the rare feat of making four wo-base hits, two of them in the ninth inning, and winning the game.
