THE WOMAN'S CORNERSUMMERY SUNSHADE FOR WINTRY WEAR

How the maids and matrons of the frigid north will envy their sisters of the southland the opportunity to wear this dainty confection RIGHT NOW! These who find large enough checks in their Christmas stockings may do more than envy, for this is one of the charming effects especially designed to please the fashionable winter resorters at Palm Beach. It will be seen on the esplanade there after the holidays. It is on a basis of folded white net, with a very wide brim and a moderate crown. The edging of the underbrim is of black velvet ribbon, put on in ripples. The outside brim is of Irish point lace expressly designed for the hat shape. An entire bird of paradise covers the greater portion of the crown its head in front, wings extremely right and left.

CYNTHIA GREY'S CORRESPONDENTS

Dear Miss Grey: Would you through your department kindly answer the following questions: What is Car negie's full name and full address? Andrew Carnegie, Fifth Avenue, New York.

Leaving Cards.

Dear Miss Grey: Should one leave her visiting cards when attending an at home?

When making calls does one leave the same number of visiting cards with the maid or under the door if the party upon which one is calling is not at home? Or does one leave her own card and not her husband's?

IGNORANCE.

1. Yes.
2. The same number should be left in either case.

Her Brother's Friend.

Dear Miss Grey: We have been living here for over a year, and my brother has been working for a young man who is twenty years old. He seems to think a great deal of my brother, and has called twice on our family. Now, I want to know if it would be all right for me to send him a gift of some sort, and would it be appropriate for me to embroider some handkerchiefs for him? He is entirely alone in the world, but is a highly respected young man.

I am fifteen years old and would like to know how to overcome the topics of conversation.
A.R.

Eruptions on the Face.

Dear Miss Grey: 1. Lately I have been troubled with eruptions and the pores of my nose and face have gotten large. Will you please publish a remedy for both?

2. When using lemon as a beautifier for the face, should it be rubbed on at night, and should it be mixed with milk?
MAGGIE.

Letion for Enlarged Pores.

1. Most likely impure blood is what causes the eruptions, and in this case I advise you to have your family physician prescribe for you. After bathing your face apply the lotion for which I am giving the recipe.
2. The lemon juice should not be mixed with milk. It should be applied at night and allowed to dry on the skin. A very good remedy for red hands is made of the following:
Lanolin.....100 grains
Paraffin (digested).....25 grains
Extract of vanilla.....10 drops

"The husband obeyed the suggestion, and in a few seconds the girl opened her eyes and looked about her with a wondering gaze."
"Oh, I remember," she said faintly, making an effort to rise. "Tom, dear, I have been fainting. I never did such a thing before."
"You think you can stand if I help you, darling?" he asked the young husband tenderly. "Let me help you to the couch, you're tired, aren't you?"
"Oh, Tom," she answered, "I feel so funny and giddy and swimming about the head. I think you had better help me to the bedroom, and let me lie down for a little while."
"You gave me a rare old fright, little woman," said Tom, as he helped her gently to her feet and passed an arm about her waist. "Doctor, would you oblige me by giving my wife an arm on the other side? I sent for the doctor at once, dear, and fortunately he was close at hand."

"But these seizures are generally due to some irregularity of the heart. When your wife has thoroughly recovered I should suggest an examination. There's nothing like taking that sort of thing in the clean forgotten."

"We're just starting on a tour around the world, and of course I want her to be as safe as she can be from a recurrence of this sort of thing." He was a young man of winsome countenance, ruddy and goodly to look at. He was also a young man of an expansive nature, and one of those people who are willing to talk about their own affairs. "We got into Tibury Dock last night," he said, "ten hours late. Fancy trying to make a dash for it! I was in the head winds all the way, and I'm inclined to think, rather a short one. I'm pretty well known this side, but this is my first visit to the old world. Well, good-by, doctor, if you must be going. Thanks for your kind care and promptitude. Shall we say about seven this evening for that examination? Thank you."

The doctor being gone, Mr. Belthorpe very softly tried the door of the best room to which his wife had retired, and somewhat to his surprise discovered that it was locked. But reflecting how very desirous to remain undisturbed for a time, he did not hesitate to try the handle once more to the study of the times. Could he have seen into the next room, he might perhaps have been a little puzzled. Mrs. Belthorpe was pacing noisily and warily up and down the passage, her head bowed, and her hair was falling over her face. She was evidently distressed, and her hair was falling over her face.

"The promenade lasted half an hour, and she caught sight of her own reflection in the mirror of a large wardrobe, and was wildly disconcerted."

Her hands trembled somewhat, but she made a careful and deliberate toilet, and then, seated at the table, she calmly reviewed her features into a pathetic little smile, and so rejoined her husband.

"I am much better, Tom," she said, "I feel a little shakier still, but that will pass away. Don't be worried about me, other while I am here. We're going on to Paris and Venice and Rome, and Cairo and Japan and New Zealand, and all the places there are. We're going to have a real good time. And you must ask Mr. Stornway to come with us. It will suit him to come and dine with us and to bring you with him. Mustn't she, Tom?"

"Oh, yes," returned Angela, "I met him once or twice. That is why I am so interested in the case."

"One thing her bright eyes saw quite clearly. Ethel was in love with the man who stood at the centre of this mystery, and was wearing herself thin and pale in her anxiety for him."

"Why, I declare, my dear," said Mrs. Belthorpe, as she rose to go, and shook out her dainty dress with dainty fingers. "I quite envy you. To be right in the middle of a drama in real life, as you are! It must be perfectly lovely. You sure I should rejoice in it if it were me. Why, it's the romance of the century. We're only in London for a month, so suddenly and mysteriously disappeared. I suppose you knew this chap when you were in Shanghai?" said Tom.

"Oh, yes," returned Angela, "I met him once or twice. That is why I am so interested in the case."

"And do you hope hers alone, all day and every day?" asked Angela, "with papa's sweeping up the dollars in the city?"
