Peter Rabbit Helps Paddy Beaver By Finding a Whole Lot of Trees

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.

This is the day which has been appointed as Thanksgiving Day. I am quite sure that Paddy the Beaver would celebrate it by giving thanks if he knew anything about it. But he doesn't. In his house, snug and comfortable, he probably is asleep. Anyway, he is taking a life well, eating, sleeping, talking a swim now and then under the ice for exercise, and worrying not at all. So, living there in his pond in the Green Forest, he doesn't know that this is man-made Thanksgiving Day.

But that doesn't matter. He has had his Thanksgiving Day. He had it in the summer. Yes, he had it in the summer. It was the very day Peter Rabbit met him down the Laughing Brook some distance below his pond. And Peter was partly responsible for it. At least, he likes to think he was, and I guess he really was.

You see, when Peter remembered that it was a certain kind of tree that Paddy was looking for, it popped into his little head of his that there was a chance for him to be of some use. He might help Paddy the Beaver. Why not? He could get around a great deal faster than Paddy could, so why shouldn't he have a look around for poplar trees? No sooner did the idea pop into his head than he was off, like a lipperty-lipperty-lop, as fast as his legs could take him. He didn't tell Paddy what he was going to do. He didn't even say good-by to him.

"Humph," muttered Paddy. "Humph!" That long-eared bunch of curiosity hasn't any politeness in him. I wonder what is in that foolish mind of his now. Well, I can't stop to wonder. I want to find out about the trees we will need for next winter's food, and what the way to find out is to keep a-looking and a-looking. I haven't found enough in any one place yet.

So Paddy went on roaming about and getting farther and farther from the Laughing Brook. It made him nervous. Supposing Old Man Coyote or Yowler the Bob Cat should happen along and find him so far from water? Well, he would put up the best fight he could. That would be all he could do. He did feel most uncomfortable so far from the safety of water. A rustling in the bushes and the next pat of hurrying feet made him pause and listen anxiously. Out from among some tall ferns burst Peter Rabbit quite out of breath.

"I've found them!" he cried.

BATTALION INSPECTED. Special to The Advertiser.

Woodstock, Nov. 25.—With the largest turnout of troops seen here since the war, the first Battalion Oxford Rifles was given its annual inspection this evening by Major-General J. H. MacBrien, of Ottawa, who was accompanied by Brig.-Gen. King, Col. C. E. Wynn, Col. Milman, and Major V. Indever, of London, and Col. Windell, of Galt. General MacBrien complimented the corps. The galleries of the barracks were crowded with interested citizens.

"What have you found?" demanded Paddy rather crossly. You know, being startled is apt to make any one cross. "The trees you are looking for," cried Peter. "That is, I have found a lot of poplar trees. Of course you may like them. They are quite a distance from water, but you won't find many that are near water down this way. I would like to show them to you, Paddy."

"All right," replied Paddy. "Go ahead; I'm willing to be shown." So Peter led the way and Paddy followed, doing his best to keep Peter in sight and finding it such hard work that he gave up at last. Peter discovered this and waited. At last they came to a little grove of poplar trees of all sizes. There was one great big one, a few middle-size ones, and a lot of small ones. Paddy's eyes sparkled when he saw these. They were growing near together. Eagerly he went about looking them over and judging how many there were. They were at the foot of a little hill, some of them a little way up the slope. At last Paddy sighed with pure happiness.

"Peter," said he, "I am ever and ever so much obliged to you. This takes a great load from my mind. I was afraid that I might have to move away from this part of the Green Forest, but this settles it. You don't know, you can't know, how thankful I am. This is a regular Thanksgiving Day. Now I am going home to tell Mrs. Paddy and the children, and later we'll see what must be done to harvest this splendid supply of food. Thank you, Peter. Thank you a thousand times for your help.

"Don't mention it," replied Peter. (Copyright, 1925, by T. W. Burgess.)

MODERN ART WILL NOT BE PUT ASIDE

Mrs. Ira Wade Addresses Faculty Club on Modernism—Makes Plea For Girls.

"All that is good in modern art will live, if artists succeed in expressing the life of the present day," declared Mrs. Ira Wade, in an address on "Modernism," which she presented yesterday afternoon at the regular monthly meeting of the Women's Faculty club of the university of Western Ontario.

"There are three ways of regarding modernism," Mrs. Wade said, in discussing modern writers, artists and musicians. "They can be regarded with indifference and intolerance, or they may be hailed with wild enthusiasm, but the safest method of judging them is to give them a sane and tolerant investigation, accepting what is true and beautiful and rejecting what is false."

Mrs. Wade further said that one of the purposes of modern life was the escape from artificial stimulation, which expressed itself through fads and the pose of being bored. She mentioned the sophisticated boredom of the university students. She also spoke of a number of books, dealing with university life, that had been published in the United States within recent years for use in the universities. Mrs. Wade also related some of her experiences in American colleges.

A strong plea was made by the speaker for a sympathetic understanding of the modern girl, and she declared her faith in modern literature and art.

"The modern girl," she said, "will become the ancients if they preserve the good of the past and express the life of the present."

Miss Grace Fairley addressed the session briefly on the necessity of a new nurses' home. She told of the terrible housing conditions for the nurses in training and urged the women to support the nurses' home bazaar. The club president, Mrs. W. J. Robinson, assured Miss Fairley of the sympathy of the faculty members and all those present promised their support.

Chatham Chief Now Sues City

Councillors Are Guilty of Slander, Ousted Police Official Charges.

Special to The Advertiser. Chatham, Nov. 25.—The Chatham city council will be named as a defendant in a slander suit by Chief of Police Daniel MacLachlin, that official announced today.

The grounds for the suit, the chief said, are utterances made by members of the council at a meeting some weeks ago during a discussion which ended in the passing of a resolution to the police commission suggesting that he be asked by the latter body to resign.

The chief maintains that by the ruling of the police commission on matters aired before that body he has been ostracized, and as the council has no control over police affairs the discussion of the matter by the council was quite out of order.

TO EXPECTANT MOTHERS. Letter From Mrs. Ayars Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her.

Spring Valley, Sask.—"I took the Vegetable Compound before my last confinement, when I got to feeling so badly that I could not sleep. My back ached so across my hips, and I could hardly do my work during the day. I never had such an easy confinement and this is my sixth baby. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the Farmer's Telegram and wrote you for one of your books. We have no druggist in our town, but I saw your medicine in T. Eaton's catalogue. I am a farmer's wife, so have all kinds of work to do inside and outside the house. My baby is a nice healthy girl, who weighed nine pounds at birth. I am feeling fine after putting in a large garden since baby came. (She is as good as she can be.) Yours is the best medicine for women, and I have told about it and even written to my friends about it."—Mrs. ANNIE E. AYARS, Spring Valley, Sask.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent medicine for expectant mothers, and should be taken during the entire period. It has a general effect to strengthen and tone up the entire system so that it may work in every respect as nature intends. All druggists sell this dependable medicine. Give it a trial.

PAUL DE MARKEY PLAYS IN TORONTO

Brilliant London Pianist Guest Artist of De La Salle Chorists.

A London pianist last night delighted a Toronto audience, when Paul De Markey appeared as the guest artist with the De La Salle Chorists, who gave their first annual concert in the King Edward hotel.

Of Mr. De Markey's playing the Mail and Empire writes:

"A young pianist, who has a plastic style and considerable brilliance, was heard for the first time in Toronto. Mr. De Markey is a fleet fingered artist, with a technical equipment that plays to advantage his brittle but gleaming tone. He was at his best in the Scarlatti Pastorale, a delicate and altogether lovely piece of playing. As Mr. Markey has very little emotional coloring or romance, he was wise to include in his program so many numbers that call for his peculiar dexterity. He was swift and clear as the wind in the Liszt Etude Transcendante, and gave a very brilliant presentation of the waltz from the Delibes ballet, Nalla, although one did feel that Dohnanyi had overweighed the lovely whiffs of melody when making his transcription. The pianist did a Chopin group of two Etudes, a polonaise and a ballade, and played the minuet waltz for an encore to his first group."
