Kitchener Osteopath Is Charged With Signing Paper Without Authority.

Special to The Advertiser.
Kitchener, Aug. 2.—Dr. H. M. Good, local osteopath, was charged with a violation of the Ontario medical act in the police court here today, it being alleged that he signed a paper in connection with compensation for a patient for the compensation board as a surgeon.

Dr. Good maintained that in signing the paper he had no intention of breaking the law, but merely signed it as a matter of form, having attended the patient, who had sustained a broken rib. He had not meant to convey the idea that he was a surgeon under the meaning of the Ontario medical act.

After hearing the evidence, Magistrate Weir adjourned the case for a week.

Disease Germs Doomed

Many have lost terrors for the Scientist

The progress of recent years in medical research is little short of marvellous. Daily, science kills germs by the million. Daily, new ones are being discovered, isolated and exterminated by the march of medicine.

Science is winning. What were once regarded as serious diseases are now laughed out of countenance by the doctors. Fearfully they plunge naked hands into swarms of them, their only precaution being to rinse their hands afterwards with a reliable germicidal preparation. We are winning the birth of an era when the world will have little to fear from microbes.

WARREN G. HARDING DIES SUDDENLY AT SAN FRANCISCO OF APOPLEXY, BELIEVED ON ROAD TO RECOVERY

Chief Executive of the United States Passes Away Without Speaking.

BRAVE IN SORROW

Mrs. Harding and Two Nurses With Him When End Came.

Associated Press Despatch.

San Francisco, Aug. 2.—Warren G. Harding, president of the United States, died instantaneously and without warning tonight at 7:30 o'clock, a victim of a stroke of apoplexy, which struck him down in his weakened condition, after an illness of exactly a week.

The chief executive of the nation, and by virtue of his office and personality one of the world's leading figures, passed away at the time when his physicians, his family and his people thought that medical skill, hope and prayer had won the battle against disease.

With the passing of Mr. Harding, the office of president devolves upon Calvin Coolidge, vice-president of the United States, a man silent in nature, but demonstrated as strong in emergencies. He was notified of the death of Mr. Harding at his home in Plymouth, Vermont.

The suddenness with which the end came was shown by the fact that only Mrs. Harding and two nurses, Ruth Powderly and Sue Dausser, were in the room at the time.

Reading to Husband.

Mrs. Harding was reading to her husband, when suddenly, without warning, a slight shudder passed through the frame of the chief executive, he collapsed and died. Immediately the indications of distress showed themselves, Mrs. Harding ran to the door and called for Lieutenant-Commander Boone and for the other doctors to come quickly.

Only Doctors Sawyer and Boone, the chief and assistant chief physicians, were able to reach the room before the nation's leader passed away. They were powerless to do anything.

Brave in the face of the president's illness, Mrs. Harding remained brave in the realization of death, and did not break down, continuing to be "the bravest member of the group." Her first words, when she realized the president had died were: "I am not going to break down."

Free From Discomfort.

The death of the president came after a day which had been described by Brigadier-General Sawyer, his personal physician, as the most satisfactory day the president had had since his illness began. The physicians in the White House announced that the end came during the day, and that there was every justification for anticipating a prompt recovery.

The death of the nation's chief executive was announced in these words: "President Harding died instantaneously and without warning and while conversing with members of his family at 7:30 p.m. Death was apparently due to a brain evulsion, probably apoplexy."

"During the day he had been free from discomfort and there was every prospect of a prompt recovery. Signed, C. E. Sawyer, M.D.; Roy Lyman Wilbur, M.D.; C. M. Cooper, M.D.; J. H. Egan, M.D.; J. H. Lavelle, in preparation for the final matches."

Life of Harding.

Warren G. Harding, president of the United States, was born on November 2, 1865. Warren G. Harding brought to the presidency an inheritance of patience and kindness in dealing with public questions and men, which enabled him to handle the problems of government without the stress and worry which had handicapped many of his predecessors.

Whatever else historians may say of him, there probably will be little dispute that few chief executives came to office in peace time facing problems more complex than his. His greatest single effort in the field of domestic legislation was in behalf of this measure.

Not infrequently was Mr. Harding called upon to play the role of peace-maker in domestic affairs. He intervened in a dispute between Congress and the treasury as to the form general tax revision was to take, and the program he approved was carried out in the main with a reduction of more than half a billion in the nation's tax burden. Likewise, his counsel settled the long controversy between the House and Senate on the question of American valuation in the tariff law. He proposed in its place a flexible tariff arrangement under which the tariff commission was given authority with his approval to increase or lower rates within prescribed limitations. Upon signing the bill, the president declared it constituted the greatest tariff reform in American history.

Pioneer Stock.

Mr. Harding came of hardy pioneer stock. He was born at Blooming Grove, Morrow County, Ohio, November 2, 1865, the son of a country doctor, George T. Harding. Like most country boys he went to country school doing morning and night chores and later attended at Iberia, Ohio.

He tried school teaching for a year, but having had a smell of printers' ink while sticking type for his college paper, the lure drew him into the newspaper field.

His family meantime had moved to Marion, in an adjoining county, where he obtained his first newspaper job, where his life interests were centered thereafter. Mr. Harding's ambition was to become a publisher, and it was realized at the age of 19, when he bid to be misconstructed the world was given to understand from the first of the Harding administration that the United States, freely respecting the rights of the other nations, asked for herself only that to which she was entitled in simple justice, and that she could accept nothing less.

Acted As Counsellor.

While in his dealings with Congress, Mr. Harding was a counsellor.

PRESIDENT WARREN G. HARDING.

chief executive of the United States, who passed away last night following an attack of apoplexy. A great figure in stabilizing the world since the Great War, President Harding has won the respect of all nations, and today Canada sends forth her sympathy, realizing the passing of one of the world's greatest men.

"High Spots"

These constituted the "high spots" in the events of the Harding administration:
Re-establishment of peace with Germany and Austria.
The calling of the arms conference which approved the naval limitation treaty and the four-power Pacific treaty.
Ratification of the treaty with Columbia resulting from the partitioning of Panama.
Revision of the tax and tariff laws.
Farmer aid legislation with particular reference to easier credits on more liberal terms.
Establishment of the budget bureau.
Veto of the soldiers' bonus bill.
Extension of the program of aid of wounded, sick and disabled veterans of the world war.
Advancement of United States participation in the world court.

gress Mr. Harding preferred the role of counsellor rather than dictator he speedily removed any doubt that his gift of patience denied any lack of firmness. He had charted a course. Thus he told Congress that soldiers' bonus legislation should carry the means of financing or be postponed, and when the legislators put aside his advice he promptly vetoed the bill they sent him.

His tenacity of purpose was further exemplified in his continual pounding of economy in public expenditures and again in his insistence that Congress pass the merchant marine bill with a view to curtailing the continued drain which the operation of the war-built commercial fleet had become upon the treasury. His greatest single effort in the field of domestic legislation was in behalf of this measure.

Was Peacemaker.

Not infrequently was Mr. Harding called upon to play the role of peace-maker in domestic affairs. He intervened in a dispute between Congress and the treasury as to the form general tax revision was to take, and the program he approved was carried out in the main with a reduction of more than half a billion in the nation's tax burden. ## Milestones

Born in Blooming Grove, Morrow County, Ohio, November 2, 1865.
Began career as newspaper publisher, November 26, 1884.
Elected to Ohio State Senate, his first political office, November 6, 1888.
Elected lieutenant-governor of Ohio, November 3, 1903.
Defeated as Republican candidate for governor, November 8, 1910.
Elected to United States Senate, November 8, 1914.
Nominated for the presidency, June 12, 1920.
Elected president, November 2, 1920.
Inaugurated March 4, 1921.
Died August 2, 1923.

Mr. Harding's greatest pride was in his professional accomplishments and training as printer, editor and publisher. Nor did the interests and exacting duties of his high office serve to dull his delight in pottering about a composing-room. On his first trip back home after his inauguration, he went to the Star office, pulled off his coat, rolled up his sleeves, borrowed a chew of tobacco and helped "make up" the paper. His luck charm was a printer's galley carried always in a vest pocket.

As his ambition had carried him into the ranks of publishers, so his fancy took him into the realm of politics. From the first he was an ardent partisan, and his insistence upon wearing a "stovepipe" hat, the badge of support of James G. Blaine, while a reporter on a Democratic newspaper brought him a sharp reprimand from his chief, who held it to be inconsistent for a worker on a Democratic paper to so prominently display the symbol of his Republicanism.

The future president's ability as a stump speaker won him early recognition from his local party leaders. Marion County then was in Democratic column, and he undertook to switch it to the Republican party, but his first effort at office on his party ticket resulted in a defeat, though he commanded an unexpected vote.

Became Senator.

Mr. Harding's first political office was that of Ohio state senator, to which he was elected at the age of 34. He served two terms, and later was elected lieutenant-governor of his state. In 1910 he sought the governorship, but was defeated. Four years later he was elected to the United States Senate, where he served six years, much of the time as a member of the important foreign relations committee. From this place he was elevated to the presidency, the first senator to be elected chief executive.

Early in his years of political service he met William McKinley, to whom his close friends have most likened him, and with whom he had in common a predominant passion for obliteration of class and sectional lines. A friendship sprang up between the two men. Mr. Harding also was close in later years to Theodore Roosevelt, Senator Foraker and Fenimore and other high in his party councils.

The president was a life-long Baptist, and was a trustee of his home church in Marion. He also had been a member of the Elk and Moose fraternities for years, and after his election as president he became a thirty-second degree Mason and a Shriner.

Golf was his favorite recreation, but he also liked to fish, although his opportunities for that sport were limited after he came to the White House. He played hard, and possessed the faculty of putting all his worries behind him during his recreation hours.

CALVIN COOLIDGE, Associate Press Despatch.
Washington, Aug. 2.—Calvin Coolidge is perhaps better equipped by experience to take up his administrative duties in the White House than was any of his predecessors who have been called to that high office by the death of a president.

Having won for himself in large measure the vice-presidential nomination by his executive forcefulness as governor of Massachusetts, he has kept throughout the Harding administration closely advised as to the problems of the federal government, and has assisted in shaping administration policy by his constant attendance at cabinet meetings.

Familiar With Work.

Although vice-presidents usually have no other duties to perform than that of presiding over the senate, casting the deciding vote when that body finds itself in a tie, Mr. Coolidge has absorbed himself from its session every Tuesday and Friday to participate in cabinet deliberations. Thus he became familiar not only with all angles of the major public questions but also with the reasons actuating the president in his decisions.

Not only has he given his best ability to the work, but he has done as much as any other member of the administration to place his accomplishments before the people. He has traveled a great deal, making addresses, and is said to have made more public appearances than any other member of his cabinet. His intimate touch with administration affairs sometimes has brought upon him considerable reproaches and some embarrassment from senators and others who sought to obtain through him information concerning developments in the White House, or to have placed before the president particular views on pending issues. He usually has remained silent, refusing to discuss public matters under these trying conditions, meetings or to act as a go-between for those interested in having their views presented to the president.

Canadian Press Despatch.

When the first news of his serious illness came the people of Canada were shocked, and this was followed by relief when word was received that he was gaining ground. The news of his sudden death comes now as a shock, and the sympathy of the Canadian people goes out in full measure to the American people in their loss."

On his recent visit to Canadian territory he did much to strengthen the ties between the two countries in friendship, and created an impression that will long be remembered with kindness."

While a reporter on a Democratic newspaper brought him a sharp reprimand from his chief, who held it to be inconsistent for a worker on a Democratic paper to so prominently display the symbol of his Republicanism.

WILL ELIMINATE TWELVE-HOUR DAY

American Steel Mills To Adopt Change As Soon As Possible.

MORE LABOR NEEDED

Associated Press Despatch.
New York, Aug. 2.—Elimination of the twelve-hour day in the steel industry will begin immediately and wages of employees whose hours are reduced from twelve to eight hours will be so adjusted as to afford earnings equivalent to a 25 per cent increase in hourly and base rates, directors of the American Iron and Steel Institute decided today.

Elbert H. Gary, president of the American Iron and Steel Institute, and chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, in making the formal announcement at the conclusion of today's conference, said the change would be effected as rapidly as the supply of labor would permit. He said it was impossible to say when the changes would be completed, but declared the shift would be no unnecessary delay on the part of anyone.

It is estimated that the shorter working day will necessitate the employment of between 60,000 and 65,000 additional laborers, and will add approximately $35,000,000 to the annual payroll of the industry.

Continuous Hourly Rates.

Employees in the continuous process departments, who now receive $4.80 for a 12-hour day, will receive $4 for an 8-hour day under the plan. All other workmen, it was announced, will be on 10 hours or less, and their present hourly and base rates will be continued.

Officials of both the independent steel companies represented in the institute and of U. S. Steel Corporation subsidiaries, departed for their homes tonight to begin at once the work of effecting the change.

Today's action by steel officials, representing substantially the entire industry in this country, brought to a favorable conclusion a series of conferences and study of the industry which began when President Harding at a White House dinner requested Mr. Gary to undertake an investigation to ascertain the feasibility of eliminating the long hours.

A committee appointed by Mr. Gary at the May meeting of the American Iron and Steel Institute, reported that it would be impossible to reduce hours in the immediate future because of the shortage of labor. President Harding publicly expressed his disapproval of that report, and subsequently Mr. Gary wrote the president that the industry would begin the elimination of the much-criticized twelve-hour shift "as soon as practicable."

Conference Called.

The first formal conference on the subject was held in New York last Thursday when heads of the manufacturing subsidiaries of the U. S. Steel Corporation met with Chairman Gary, and on the following day directors of the American Iron and Steel Institute took up the matter for the industry as a whole.

Both meetings adjourned over the week-end to permit the presidents of the various companies to return to their homes to learn, if possible, the attitude of the employees who would be affected. Presumably officials found a majority of the employees agreeable to the changed rate of pay for the shorter hours, although no announcement as to that was made today.
