TURTLE MOUNTAIN SHOWING THE PATH OF THE SLIDE

Starting from the summit of the mountain at the reader's left, the crest slid down into the valley and across it, cutting the Canadian Pacific Railway line on the other side. The path of the slide is plainly visible in the photograph.

She died a few minutes afterwards. In conclusion, the Colonial Secretary said he desired that the discussion of this subject should be open. It was an issue graver in its consequences than mere local disputes. A mistake in legislation could be corrected, he said, but a mistake in the Imperial policy was irretrievable. Personally he did not think a general election very near, but whether near or distant, the issue would depend on whether the people have it in their hearts to do all that is necessary, even if it occasionally went against their prejudices, to consolidate an Empire which could only be maintained by relations of sentiment.

The speaker said he believed that an entirely wrong interpretation had been placed upon the doctrine of free trade, but that the country ought not to be bound by this, and it should not hesitate to resort to retaliation if necessary wherever the interests between the colonies and the home country were threatened.

Mr. Chamberiain avowed himself a free trader, but he objected to the artificial and narrow interpretation of free trade; he pointed out that Cobden had made, and that Bright had approved a preferential treaty with France, and said: "There are two alternatives before you, first to maintain the free trade policy in all its severity, although it is repudiated by every other nation and your colonies; second, to insist that we be not bound by any purely technical definition of free trade, while we seek the one chief object, the free interchange of commerce between ourselves and all the nations of the world we will nevertheless recover our freedom, resume the power of negotiation, and if necessary retaliation."
