

Can there be any great doubt as to Newman's mission? Was it not undeniably to fight against the cold, self-sufficient, self-wise tranquillity of too many of his contemporaries? To fix our minds upon the eternal realities—which the modern spirit is as anxious to soften, blanch, and water down as the mediaeval spirit was to exaggerate?

WILL. L. STONER.

Ottawa, Ont., February, 1901.

