in to the elementary school, who have had at least part of Grade XI training. That is, the standard is unconsciously rising itself. Of course, the time might come when we can say we don't need to have any more.

I think in the present elementary schools in which there are twenty or nineteen, about three of them have taken Grade XI. The others either failed to make the grade, or they have not taken sufficient subjects, and during the last few years, that situation has offered itself, and it is offering itself.

COLONEL BOVEY: Where do they take that extra Grade XI?

DEAN HENDEL: I would like to know whether the bursary is given for the purposes of the Summer School.

PROF. LOCKHART: It is given to a girl because she comes there and promises to go back and work for three years in the rural districts.

PROF. LOCKHART: There is a possibility of that.

DEAN O'NEILL: Would it not amend the situation to make it that students, after a certain date, should have Grade XI. There could be an increased bursary or bonus of some kind, to provide for additional summer school to bring them up to the general average.

THE PRINCIPAL: You mean the summer school at MacDonald College?

DEAN O'NEILL: Yes.

PROF. LOCKHART: According to present regulations, while
