

Mr. MACCULLOH, The fashionable world are not a little astonished that the select and elegant weekly parties given by Mrs. Long-one, at her mansion in St. Jabee Street have hitherto escaped your notice. These routs, as they are called, exhibit the very quintessence of bon ton, and exquisites of all descriptions, dandies, and dandizettes; when assembled in the spacious saloons of the accomplished hostess, form a coup d'œil of the most enchanting kind. Quadrilles, music, cards and flirtation are by turns the amusements which constitute the attraction of these entertainments. The last in particular is enjoyed with great zest. Parties à deux are generally made each time; Miss Newark has a train of admirers, and amongst the foremost are Captain Moresco, and Mr. Hal Foresight, but the gallant Lieutenant Colonel Michilimackinac there is no doubt will carry the day. By the bye, Captain Moresco is so great a friend and admirer of your writings that he declared one day they were so infamous he would not spend a sixpence on them, for which reason he rather chose to copy out the whole account of the Countess of Oldjoseph's grand fête than buy the number. Amongst the fashionable who frequent these fashionable parties are further to be ranked Mrs. Desarcs, Misses Fitzjohn, Michilimackinac, Hogsflesh, etc. Dr. Drugwell, Messrs. Staw, Le Sly, B. Cannon, Huggs, etc. The last named, who has attained great experience in every branch of the fur-trade; it is said aspires to the honour of receiving the fair hand of Miss Long-one.

Of all the balls too, it is surprising that that given by the Staff-corps on the 9th instant, which was very numerously attended, has not yet been chronicled in the rolls of fame through your
