MANY WORDS OF DEEP SYMPATHY

By the Leaders of the House On the Sudden Deaths of Mr Ives and Senator Sanford was unusually slim, even for Monday, there being so many members attending the funeral of Hon. W. B. Ives, and others who were absent on account of the illness of Hon. C. A. Geoffrion. There was also an air of sadness pervading the House, and e present were reminded of the loss which the House has sustained on Saturday by the desk which Mr. Ives had occupied eing covered with a small black velvet pall, on which rested a magnificent wreath, composed of Japanese sacred lilies, sweet peas, maiden hair fern and long trailers of smilax. The wreath was one of the most beautiful ever seen in the House. Accordago, there was no motion made for the adarnment of the House, but the leader of high character, ability and standing of the ceased, both in public and private life, in which he was feelingly joined by the Premier, who added a personal touch to his culogism of the deceased by referring to the fact that in early life, when both he and Mr. Ives were young and struggling lawyers, they traveled on the same circuit, and age. were frequently engaged in the same cases, sometimes together and sometimes opposed

The motion which Sir Wilfrid Laurier gave notice that he will move on Wednesday'next with respect to the Senate, reads as follows:

as follows:

That an humble address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen, setting forth that the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, respecting the powers of the Senate of Canada in the making of laws are unsatisfactory and should be brought more into harmony with the principle of popular government, and praying that Her Majesty may be pleased to recommend to the Imperial Parliament a measure for the amendment of the said act in such terms as will effectually make provision as follows:

If the House of Commence actions the terms and the said act in such terms as will effectually make provision as follows:

will effectually make provision as follows:

If the House of Commons passes any bill which the Senate rejects or fails to pass, or amends in a way not accepted by the House of Commons, at the next following session again passes such bill, and the Senate again rejects or fails to pass or amends the same in a way not accepted by the Commons, the Governor General may by proclamation convene one or more joint sittings of the hembers of the two Houses for the further consideration of such bill or amendments, and a question whether such bill or amendment shall pass, shall be decided by a majority of the members of the two Houses present and voting, and the yote of any such joint sitting shall, as respects such bill or amendments, have the same force and effect as a vote of the Senate under the existing constitution.

session of the ninth Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, and at last it looks as if the end was not far off. The Senate resolution, of which notice is given to-night, does not look so very formidable as was expected, and less unlikely things have hapened than that it may be approved by the Senate, for it will, of course, be submitted to the Senate. It is not very likely to pass, but the improvement of the Premier's first utterance by bringing the joint ballot into force only after the Senate has twice recommons cannot accept, has gained the resolution some friends even in the Senate.

The Redistribution Bill.

As to the redistribution bill, it now seems pretty certain that the Senate will bundle it out neck and crop by the six months hoist, in which case it is said, the Government will next year introduce and pass a much more stringent measure and make it a direct issue between the Commons and the Senate at the next elections. The second reading of the bill was moved in the Senate to-day by Minister Mills, in an exceedingly able speech, in which he displayed a wonderful amount of historical research on the development of the British constitution, and traced the growth of government by the people with great care. The latter part of his speech, in which he tried to make the modern gerrymander fit into his fine historical essay on constitutional government, was not so successful and was very much like trying to fit a round pin into a square hole.

As only the unused remains of three-cent stamps now in the department will be surcharged, postmasters are instructed that they must not send in with a view to their surcharge, any three-cent stamps in their possession now, except three-cent stamps from the public for that purpose.
