Pius XI. a Diplomat And a Deep Student

Vigorous in Body and Mind at Age of 65—Won Success as Nuncio—Preserved Church Unity in Poland.

In Catholic Church circles Pius XI, the new Pontiff, is regarded as a favorable figure for peace with the Italian state and is expected to carry forward his work toward a rapprochement between the Vatican and the Quirinal. Without acting as an extremist, upon his installation as Archbishop of Milan he made a notable pronouncement upon the Roman question, in which he declared that "the Roman question is an international question, which must be solved for the glory of God and the best interests of the world." This pronouncement created widespread comment throughout Italy at the time.

A high church dignitary in Washington, who knows the new Pontiff personally, regards him as a very able diplomat and pointed to his work as Papal nuncio to Poland and subsequently his work in those portions of Poland under Russian rule on the East Polish frontier. Mr. Ratti who had not then received the Red Hat, conducted important negotiations in Poland and Russia, in the interest of the church and was stationed in Warsaw during the famous drive of the Reds against the gates of the Polish capital. At a time when the officials of Poland were talking of deserting Warsaw, and the population was in fear of Bolshevik outrages, Mr. Ratti displayed a courageous attitude, remained at his post and set the example for others, in the face of the Red onslaught. It was in recognition of his service in Poland and Russia that he was created a cardinal.

Son of Italian Weaver.

The newly elected Pope's father was Francesco Ratti, a native of Roggeno, Italy, and his mother Teresa Galli, a native of Savonno. Achille was the third of six children. His oldest brother, Fermo, and the youngest sister, Camilla, are still living.

Francesco, the father, was a flaxweaver and a spinner—and, at the time of the birth of Achille, was in charge of the weavers employed by the Counts of Pualano. Later the father went to Pualano and then to Carugate to be in charge of the weaving shops of the Gada firm. The Ratti family was neither rich nor poor, but belonged to the respectable middle class of artisans.

Achille was sent to a school in Desio conducted by Don Giuseppe Volontari, a priest noted among Milan as an educator. Volontari had started this school before Italian law made education obligatory and conducted it for forty-three years, in his own house. While it was an elementary school, Don Giuseppe took extra pains with the more promising of his pupils singling them out for special training. So with Achille Ratti—he was one of the best of the contadini, or children of the middle classes, singled out by Volontari for more intensive training.

Under this guidance, young Achille was able to enter the gymnasium of St. Peter Martyr. One who knows the new Pontiff stated tonight that in 1884, after he had been ordained as priest and had become a professor at Milan, he went back to Desio to deliver the funeral sermon in commemoration of the humble father who had conducted this school and who had given Achille the rudiments of education. This sermon was delivered from the piazza of the parochial church. Ratti also wrote the epitaph for his father's tomb.

NEARLY LOST HER LIFE NURSING DYING MOTHER

"For six months I had to devote all my spare time to nursing my mother who was slowly dying of an incurable disease. Not being well-off we couldn't afford the services of a nurse, so I had to be with her day and night."

She was a large woman and it took all my strength to lift her. Realizing that she had not long to live, she naturally wanted me with her all the time and my spare time was all I could snatch from my household I gave to her. Four months ago she died and an hour after the funeral I went into a dead faint. The loss of sleep, the worry and the extra day and night work had finally been more than I could stand. They put me to bed. I contacted a high fever and was delirious for some days. For a while our doctor gave up all hopes of saving my life. However, I did succeed in pulling through but the strain and the illness had shattered my nerves. Worry and trouble had left me a physical wreck. I was so weak I couldn't lift my hands to my mouth. For two weeks I had to be fed. I gradually got a little stronger but I was determined that I would not let myself be nursed. I was suggested trying Carnol. I was anxious to get strong that I was willing to try anything. I never would have believed that any preparation would have made such a change in so short a time as Carnol did with me. To day, thanks to Carnol, I feel fine—in fact I never felt better."

Chapter of Canon of St. Ambrose with the title of Monsignor. In Milan there are numerous academic and scientific bodies. Ratti worked with them, particularly in the restoration of the registers and fabrics of the Cathedral of Milan, the records of its many years of building, which were burned during the Milan Exposition of 1906. He also became a member of the Royal Lombard Institute of Science and Letters and the Lombard Historical Society, of which he is vice-president. These various positions have won him a wide circle of friends throughout the Cathedral city.

Mr. Ratti served as Prefect of the Vatican Library from the summer of 1914, shortly before the war, until the spring of 1918, when he was delegated by Pope

When Ratti returned from Rome to Milan in 1882, the first thing he did was to ask that he be sent to take charge of the tiny parish of Baroli. When he went that fall to teach in the major seminary in Milan he became the chaplain of the convent that was then being started in Milan by the sisters of Our Lady of the Consolation and has since been their chaplain.

During the time that he was connected with the Milanese Library Ratti went to Rome from time to time to pursue studies and research work in the Vatican Library and to obtain needed data on historical documents. When Mr. Ceriani died in March, 1907, Ratti was chosen to succeed him in charge of the Ambrosiana Library. He continued at this post until 1914, but in 1910 he was called to Rome to become vice-prefect of the Vatican Library by Pope Pius X.

The Prefect of the Vatican Library, and assistant to Father Ebner, a Bavarian Jesuit, who resigned in 1914 and went to Germany at the outbreak of the war. Ratti was then placed in charge of the Vatican Library as prefect, and for some time was connected with both these great libraries.

Appetite Good, Gained 20 lbs.

Could Not Feel Better

From a nervous wreck this man was restored to health, strength and happiness.

He tells his own story in this letter.

Mr. Ralph A. Roberts, Lovers, Sask., writes:

"In 1917 I had lost all appetite, very nervous and shaky and in fact gave up all hope of recovery. For some time I had suffered from indigestion, which kept getting worse, until I was fast becoming a total wreck. Doctors and their drugs were sending me to my grave at the age of 39."

"Then I read about people being restored by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after three months' use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and Kidney-Liver Pills I found that my bowels were restored to normal movement each day and the constipation was no more. I had gained 20 lbs. and could not feel better. I shall always be grateful for these benefits."

Benedict XV to the important position of Nuncio of Poland. During the four years of war that he was in charge of the Vatican Library, antipathies ran high between the Germans and Italians, as well as between clericals and anti-clericals. His position was accordingly a difficult one, in dealing with the men of various nationalities using the library and its archives.

"During all that difficult period," said an ecclesiastic tonight, "Mr. Ratti remained a true Italian in sentiment, but his temper was most equitable, and he treated everybody well."

Mr. Ratti worked with splendid tact and prudence in the Vatican Library. Nobody ever accused him of giving that liberal tendency. All who came on work of research or seeking documents received free access to all the facts and treasures of the library. He had faith in the cause of justice, and never doubted but that this cause would prevail against that of arms. He made no mystery of his attitude, but did everything in such a tactful way that he never compromised the Vatican in the responsible position the Holy See had given him.

Difficulties in Poland Overcome.

Mr. Ratti started for Poland under Pope Benedict's commission on April 25, 1918, and what was known in advance to be a hard diplomatic and ecclesiastical mission. Before that he had no previous experience in diplomacy except for some trips which he had made with Archbishop Radini-Telesini to Vienna in 1891 and to Paris in 1894.

His trip into Poland was made about the time of the Brest-Litovsk Treaty, which the Germans had imposed on the Russians. Poland was at that time occupied by German military force. Leopold of Bavaria was the German Governor-General and General Von Beseler commanded the German army of occupation. Warsaw was under the control of a council of regents composed of Archbishop Kakowski, Prince Lubomirski and Baron Ostrowski.

There were many Poles who at that time suspected the regents, thinking that they were about to act as instruments of German domination. In this situation Mr. Ratti was entrusted with the duty of stating that his mission was ecclesiastical and spiritual and without political significance.

He was in Poland practically throughout the period of the restoration of that country into an independent nation, and his duties were extended by the Vatican to cover the former Russian Provinces along the Polish Eastern frontier. Through out these parts of Russia he travelled. He was entrusted with the task of establishing new dioceses where German Bishops had been in Poland, and also established Bishoprics that had been suppressed in those parts of former Czarist Russia which he visited.

It was tonight that Mr. Ratti succeeded beyond hopes in this work despite the fact that Poland was occupied by German forces and that in the face of revolutions in Russia he obtained results that could not be achieved under the regime of the Czar.

Immediately after the armistice of 1917 serious questions arose regarding the status of church properties in Poland and Russia. There was a popular movement for the division of landed estates in what had been Prussian and Russian Poland. The churches possessed lands and became interested in a property movement.

The Bishops declared they were not opposed to the division of the Church lands, but they insisted on a division of the Church lands with the Church and without interference with the work of the Church.

Mr. Ratti played an important diplomatic and ecclesiastical role in this connection. He called together a commission of Bishops, which was recognized by the Polish Government, and at the same time succeeded in obtaining from the Polish Constituent Assembly a resolution that no law as to Church properties would be enacted without consultation with the Holy See.

Firmness as a Diplomat.

When Mr. Ratti was first sent into Poland his mission was in reality that of a Papal visitor. One reason why he was only a "visitor" and not a full "Nuncio" was that Poland had not been a nation since its partition more than a century before. Later, after the Versailles Treaty, and the establishment of Poland as an independent nation, Mr. Ratti was on July 6, 1915, made Nuncio at Warsaw. This represented a restoration of the old nunciature of Poland that existed before the partition.

This mission further revealed the qualifications of Mr. Ratti as a diplomat. He was a man of firmness, courage and evenness of temper. During the Bolshevik invasion of July, 1920, when Warsaw's inhabitants were being driven, Polish Government officials were in despair and getting ready for flight. The population made ready for Bolshevik horrors, and the Russian Reds were hammering at the gates of Warsaw.

Mr. Ratti stood at his post without losing his serenity and inspired others to do likewise. This was compared tonight by ecclesiastics in the period in his early life as a mountain climber when he had to keep his head when clambering among precipices in the Alps.

Another mission was later performed by Mr. Ratti when he was appointed

Science Now Shows Why Thousands of People Are Always Weak, Thin, and Run-Down No Matter How Much They Eat

What to Do to Help Put on Good Firm Flesh, Increase Weight, and Obtain a More Beautiful Form and Figure

Get a FREE $1.00 Package of Genuine Yeast Vitamins Tablets Today as Explained Below—Try Them for Ten Days and Watch the Results

Science has at last shown how we sometimes grow weak, thin, and emaciated as an abundance of food (lacking in vitamins) while with a much smaller amount of food, rich in vitamins, we may quickly take on good firm flesh, increase in weight, and make a remarkable gain in strength, energy and endurance, provided your blood contains sufficient quantity of oxygenated organic iron to enable your body to assimilate your food properly.

Without organic iron both vitamins are absolutely useless as your body cannot change lifeless inert food matter into live cells and tissues unless you have plenty of organic iron in your blood.

For centuries mankind has tried in vain to make organic iron. At last the problem was solved so that you may now obtain pure organic iron from Nature's own source—Nuxated Iron.
