WOMAN BORROWS KIDS AND GOES ON A TRAMP

Altoona Mother Uses Them to Back Up a Hard-Luck Story—"Works" the Charities.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Ella Henderson, a woman tramp, was reported from Washington to Altoona, Pa., yesterday, by the Board of Charities. With her went three small children, who have been toddling along behind their mother in one of the greatest cross-country hikes that a woman has ever taken.

The woman and the three children dropped off a train from Baltimore a few nights ago, and sat around the Union Station, with a load of dirty belongings tied up in a bundle. She had no place to go, and attracted some little attention from the surging throngs there. Somebody informed a policeman that a poor woman and three children were stranded in the concourse. The policeman looked into the matter and sent the quartet to the House of Detention, where, Sergeant Bous made them comfortable for the night, and informed Secretary George Wilson of the Board of Charities, next day.

HOME WAS IN ALTOONA.

Ella came from Altoona, Pa., and says her mother's name is Fanny Salzman.

Her stepfather, Harry Salzman, is a peddler, and he does not like Ella, and refuses to let her speak to her mother. About three years ago Ella started for the West, with some of her children.

Then began a series of wanderings from the West to the East, and she was evidently, as she says, she always had enough to eat and that the children were never hungry. She got into Toledo, Ohio, a few weeks ago, with an addition to her staff of fellow wanderers in the shape of an additional child, several years old. She said she wanted to go to Chicago, though, and charitable persons were glad to give her a free ticket.

In November of December, 1909, she prevailed on the Chicago Jewish Aid Society to send her back to Altoona, according to her story. She stayed in Altoona just two days, and the wanderlust overcame her again, and she shuffled along the open road to her native town, where a man named Goodman took pity on her and helped her to Philadelphia. From the gay scenes of the Quaker City she left for Wilmington, Del., but soon went to Baltimore, and from Mayor Babbitt's city she came to Washington, and from Washington she has gone again to Altoona.

THE TOOK CHAPLAIN FOR SPEAKER CANNON

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—"Uncle Joe" Cannon is a powerful singer of the old Methodist hymns when the spirit moves him, but never until yesterday was he taken for a minister. One of the rules of the House provides that visitors to the galleries shall not be admitted when the chaplain is invoking a blessing at the opening of the session.

Soon after the Rev. Henry N. Couden, the blind chaplain, took his place in the speaker's rostrum today a woman approached a gallery attendant and sought admission. She was told to wait a minute.

"I want to see that old Cannon," she said. The doorkeeper replied that she would have the privilege if she were waiting.

"But I want to get in now and see that old cuss," she insisted. She became so persistent and talked in such loud tones that the doorkeeper thought it advisable to overlook the thoughtless person. Admonishing her to be quiet, he opened the door and made her enter.

Just as she got inside Mr. Couden began to repeat the Lord's Prayer. A look of surprise, followed by one of disgust, came over the face of the visitor. She turned to the doorkeeper and, with an angry shake of her head, said: "And to think of that old hypocrite praying!"

MISS DE JANON UNDER AN INCOGNITO AT SHORE

Hidden at Atlantic City From Walter Cohen and AT Interviewers—To Isie's With Her.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Feb. 8.—Roberta De Janon, heiress to the millions of Robert De Janon, and the principal figure in the sensational elopement with Fred Cohen, Bellevue-Stratford hotel, is at the Windsor Hotel here, guarded against any further efforts of Cohen to secure her aid in his fight to prevent punishment by the courts for taking the girl from her grandfather. She is also barred from interviewers.

Regarded under an assumed name, Miss De Janon has been kept in strict retirement until today, when she appeared on the boardwalk with an elderly woman guardian, who registered as "Mrs. George Redford." The instant recognition of the girl when she started out for a stroll with "Tootsie," her pet dog, forced her guardian to take her back to the hotel immediately, and it is likely that she will be taken away from the city in the effort to keep her out of the public gaze for the present at least.

Although Mrs. Redford refused to make any statement or allow her ward to be interviewed, it is known that the hurried trip to Atlantic City, made last Wednesday, had as one of its objects precaution against Cohen being given opportunity to secure the evidence of the girl in the coming trial in Philadelphia courts on the charge of having abducted Miss De Janon.

A mysterious man, believed to be agent of a private detective agency, has been stationed on the hotel porch to prevent Cohen or his friends getting in touch with the girl, and would-be interviewers are halted at the hotel desk with statements that no cards will be sent to her rooms.

On the hotel register Miss De Janon appears as "Miss Minnie Stevens," with Philadelphia as her address. Mrs. Redford is registered with her. Miss De Janon did not come here with the party, which included "Tootsie."

When Miss De Janon becomes a fine art it ceases to be a pleasure. A kiss night and morning is the badge of settled domesticity. For a kiss to mean anything it must mean everything.

A man regards kissing as a hors d'oeuvre; a woman regards it as a hors d'oeuvre.

THEIR SENTENCE NOT DEATH BUT INSANITY

Italian Penal System Worse Than Hanging

Murderers Condemned to Solitary Confinement Invariably Go Mad, If They Cannot Commit Suicide.

ROME, Feb. 8.—According to the Italian Penal Code, which abolished capital punishment, the first five years of every life sentence are to be spent in solitary confinement. The prisoner is left in a cell, watched day and night lest he should commit suicide, is not allowed to see any human being, not even the guards; is not allowed to talk to himself or read, is fed on a bowl of vegetable soup and a loaf of bread only and is allowed two hours exercise a day in a courtyard shut in by high walls.

This form of punishment, which in Italy is considered more humane than a death penalty, invariably leads to insanity, and prisoners serving a life sentence prefer death and serve it more readily before they lose their reason completely. Only a few prisoners succeed in committing suicide, and one of these few, he hanged himself with a towel while the guard who was watching him slept.

There is a special madhouse for criminals at Montepulciano, near Florence, and the majority of life inmates are convicted sentenced to life imprisonment. Recently the institution was visited by a party of medical students, who furnish details about the condition of the two registries Accetorio and Passanante, who are both insane.

Accetorio, who attempted the life of King Humbert in 1877, believes that he is the King of Italy, and that Victor Emmanuel is a usurper. Five years of solitary confinement made him forget a sworn enemy of all kings. Passanante, who stabbed King Humbert in 1878, has one hand entirely paralyzed and is afflicted with imbecility.

The brilliant Mussolini has recently been conveyed to the Montepulciano madhouse, which is the last refuge of criminals who in other countries would have been sentenced to death, and here in Italy instead of losing their lives they lose their minds.

Whenever a secret of the criminal madhouse is made public Italian realists threaten of cellular segregation, and a reform is invoked in Parliament. Deputy Di Nicola has now taken the matter up, by refusing to bring about the abolishment of cellular segregation, which he qualifies as being even more hateful than the pain of death.

For one thing, the Spring fashions will be considerably later than usual—that is to say, their full bloom will be retarded in all the highest circles. Making settlements in Paris, which, under normal conditions, are lighted by electricity, most of the work in these world-famous atteliers cannot be well done without it. These places were suddenly deprived of every bit of electric light and were dimly illuminated with oil lamps and candles instead.

At the same time the telephone service was absolutely paralyzed in the whole central shopping district. Photographers who make much money every year by producing early pictures of the most stunning creations of the seamstress' art are wringing their hands in despair. However, it is the small shop-keepers of the flooded sections of the city who will probably suffer relatively the greatest losses of all. Then there were whole trades which were indirectly stopped by the flood.

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—Benson Lang, of 145 Lenox avenue, a 17 year old messenger boy employed by the Exchange house of Hornblower and Weeks, 42 Broadway, walked out of his employers' office at 11 o'clock on Friday.

At a meeting of the Advertising Committee of the Exhibition Association the calendar for the ten days of the Dominion Fair was gone over and decided upon as follows: Saturday, Sept. 2nd—Directors' Day; Monday, Sept. 3rd—Opening and Press Day; Tuesday, Sept. 4th—Manufacturers' Day; Wednesday, Sept. 5th—P. E. Island Day; Thursday, Sept. 6th—Nova Scotia Day; Friday, Sept. 7th—Scottish Day; Saturday, Sept. 8th—Homecoming Day; Monday, Sept. 12th—Commercial Travellers' Day; Tuesday, Sept. 13th—Farmers' Day; Wednesday, Sept. 14th—Citizens' and Children's Day; Thursday, Sept. 15th—Get-Away Day.

In explanation of the above lay-out of days it may be stated that: Directors' Day—an evening show only—is of official inspection. Opening and Press Day will be a public holiday when members of the press will be probably entertained by the directors. On P. E. Island and Nova Scotia days special excursions will be run on all transportation lines. The Scottish day is designed for special gatherings of fraternal bodies with large excursion parties. Homecoming Day is to be a reunion occasion. On Commercial Travellers' Day the knights of the grip will be privileged to hold high carnival at the big show. Farmers' Day suggests its purpose, and on Citizens and Children's Day the grand wind-up will take place.

ENGINEERS BLAMED FOR PARIS FLOODS

Masson Says Restoration Will be Merely Stupendous Opportunity for Graft

Failure of Electric Lights Sets Back Work of Famous Dressmakers—City Resuming its Gaily.

PARIS, Feb. 7.—The onslaught of reproof and reproach to which the engineering profession is now subjected in France on the theory that its members are responsible for the invasion of Paris by the floods is bitter in the extreme.

Frederic Masson of the French Academy, who is more notorious, the Parliamentarians or the engineers, and substantially declares that the latter are responsible for the disaster.

He says that the presumptions and arrogant confidence of the engineers in their dry formulae prevents them from seeing plain facts, of which the verities of nature would take cognizance, such for instance, as that the windows which open on the river only a few feet above its ordinary level all along the subway that skirts its left bank invite disaster. He predicts that once the city is dried and scoured out the engineers will sketch out plans for its restoration, the chief feature of which will be that they will merely afford another stupendous opportunity for political jobbers and corrupt contractors to make colossal fortunes.

Charles Bos asserts point blank that Paris is the victim of the pseudo-sciences of the engineers. The dry rot of formal technology, he says, has done the harm. These engineers, who are simply because their modern constructions, which were to have restrained the creations of common sense and honest craftsmanship than those of the model engineers who worked under the Nazis, kings and the Bourbons.

More disastrous than siege, I find that my estimate that the material damage caused by the inundation is at least equivalent to a quarter-section of Paris by the Germans and the Communists in 1870 and 1871 has since been confirmed by the opinions of other writers, a mastery whom even de Gaulle, who is it much greater. Further than this, vast harm has been done, which is it utterly impossible to estimate. The life of Paris was to a very large degree disorganized by the inundation. In many departments of business delays were caused which are irreparable, as are others which will take a very long time to overcome.

day morning with a $10,000 gold certificate, which he was to deposit in the National City Bank, at William and Wall streets.

At 12 o'clock today he walked into the office of his employers, Hornblower and Weeks, accompanied by his parents, and reported that he had lost the bill. He said he had been in a train for some hours after he went away with the money, and that he had no idea what had happened, either to himself or to the big bill.

The police were called in and young Lang was put through a long cross-examination. At the end of that time he was locked up on a charge of grand larceny.

The police learned that several persons saw the $10,000 gold certificate while it was in the possession of young Lang. Lang himself admitted showing it to one of his fellow-messengers, named Ashland. He said that Ashland knew he had the bill and asked to see it. Ashland denies this. He said the police that he went down in an elevator with Lang and that the latter pulled the gold certificate from his pocket and said: "Would you like to see what I have?"

The police also learned that Lang showed the bill to P. Moscovitch, a Greek, who keeps a nearby candy shop. Neither one of these persons, the police are satisfied, knows anything of the whereabouts of the missing certificate, though the Greek had the bill in his hands.

The boy's own story is that after parting from Ashland and the Greek he put the bill in his pocket and headed for the bank. Ashland met him at Wall and New streets. In Wall street, Lang said, he had a dizzy spell. He went on to the bank and up to the receiving teller. Then he discovered that the bill was gone. He left the bank, he said, and went for a long walk. About this walk he remembers nothing.

When he came to himself he was in Lenox avenue, shortly before 1 o'clock in the morning. He went home, called his mother and told her what had happened. Then he went to bed. Today, he told his father, and his parents took him down to his place of employment. This story the police could not make his story.
