July Flowers.

The flowers of July lack the fragile beauty of those of early spring. Those flowers that sprang up everywhere in the woods and owed their loveliness and color to the sunshine that drifted through leafless boughs have faded. The few blossoms that now are seen in the dense leafy shade of the forest are waxen white, tinted with no color save a roseate flush. The twin snowy bells of the Mitchella, the white flowers of the wintergreen and the pyrola all belong to this month, and all of them are fragrant, beautiful plants, that look almost as ghostlike as the ghost flowers themselves, which also blossom in the woods.

Intense color demands heat and sunlight, and it is natural to find that the flowers of tropic color and luxuriant growth blossom in the meadows and swamps in the full blaze of the sun. The most magnificent colors seen in the entire cycle of blossoming things are found during this month of July in moist meade ws and swamps. The great "fringed orchids," clothed in purple and in gold, are found in our swamps in this month The purple fringed orchid, a flower in glowing violet hues, is called by Thoreau the fairest, as it is one of the rarest of our flowers." The yellow fringed orchid, which appears in swamps toward the end of this month, is so rich in color that it is known in some parts of the country as the "flaming" orchid. In the beginning of July the most beautiful and magnificent of all the race of our native" orchids appears—the snowy lady slipper, clothed in royal rose purple and white. beautiful flowers, all grow in moist, ously open places, but in inaccessible locations. It would be only a bold botanist who would venture in heated July into these open swamps in search of flowers.

Speaking of one of these wild blossoms of the bog, Thoreau says: "The village belle never sees this more delicate belle of the swamps. How little relation between our life and its ! The seasons go by to us, as if it were not. A beauty reared in the as in it were not. A beauty reared in the shade of the convent, who has never strayed beyond the convent bell. Only the skunk or owl or other inhabitant of the swamp beholds it. 'It does not pine because man does not admire it.''

* * Do Fishes Sleep?

Dr. Theodor Beer claims to have desided in the affirmative, by his observations at the biological station in Naples, the much disputed question whether fishes sleep or not. It has long been known that fishes lose their It has long been known that fishes lose their activity at the appearance of darkness and remain for hours floating in the same spot, even their usually restless eyes being motionless. Most fishes sleep in this way, just as horses sleep standing. If the equil-ibrium of the body is disturbed by clipping the fins, which soon grow out again, the fish sleep floating in a vertical position. Few fishes seek the bottom to sleep, but many float on their sides and can be caught with the hand, a fact well known to sailors. The eyes of most fishes are open necessarily during sleep, owing to the ab-sence of eyelids – Detroit News Tribune.

W. Tidmarsh, Grand Entry, Magdalen Ialands, which letter and 'money have failed to reach their destination. The letter has been traced to Souris. McClure's Magazine for Augast will contain an article on "The Cape to Cairo Railway," by W. T. Stead. As Mr. Stead is a personal friend of Cecil Rhodes, as well as of most of the important men as-sociated with him in this enterprise, his story will have a very special interest and value. It will be fully illustrated from photographs of incidents and scenes along the line. the line

"Richly illustrated" barely describes the August Cosmopolitan, there being in that great number one hundred and forty-six different illustrations of all sorts and six dimerent integrations of all sorts and sizes and not one of them commonplace or uninteresting. The literary features of the magazine vie with the pictorial, the whole forming a most attractive magazine for summer reading.
