OUR BOYS AND GIRLS. THE STORY OF LITTLE BLANCHE. A Breton Tale.

H. Horn, S. J., in American Messenger of the Sacred Heart for November.

THE ATHEIST AND LITTLE BLANCHE. I must, dear reader, if you are not afraid to come with me, use an author's privilege, and penetrate into the in-terior of the Chateau Noir hidden away in the woods between Pechols and Dek, near Quimper, in Brittany. We will enter the old library, and there we shall come upon a scene which, since we are acquainted with the local gos sip, might surprise us. The room was large, and looked grave and antique in its appearance and fittings. The old bookcases were of mahogany and had quaint figures carved along their top. There was a large, very large table, filling the middle of the room, covered with a red cloth. There were two doors, both protected by curtains, a pair of large folding doors at one end, and a smaller entrance in the side wall. There was a little of the musty smell of books in the room, but this, a fire of cedar log that burned in the grate, counteracted. It was about 8 o'clock, and the of blue ribbon and looked at them. shades of evening had lengthened, and Then listened again. Then quite softly and suddenly there came a sound of if he was the labels on the old bookcases were growing dimmer and dimmer. At the the door handle moving, preceded by no sound of approaching footsteps. fire sat a man, musing as he gazed in. to the crackling flames. Could this be The door opened and a little figure M. de Chauncy? There was nothing wizardlike about him. He was a dressed in blue slipped quietly from behind the curtain, to which she gave two or three tugs to rearrange it befine broad-shouldered man of about fore the door, then with a half grave, His face, which was propped on fifty. half shy air, she folded her little hands fist, was by no means repulsive. clasping all the time a bunch of wild His bright blue eyes, and long brown beard, now whitening with age, gave flowers, and walked in a solemn man his face a pleasant enough appearance. ner, with a few pert shakes of the It was the face of a man who looked in head, across the room. She came to within a yard or two of where her earnest, who looked as if he had a father (for this was the athee's daugh heart that would love and could at ter) was sitting, and there stopped and tract love : it was the face, too, of a made a solemn ceremonious bow ; then as though all ceremony were concluded man, whom we might judge to have touch of enthusiasm in his nature. she held up both hands and rushed at Such might have been our first impres sion. But as he sat and mused, his left fist pushed hard against his chin, her father, who was quite ready to re ceive her on to his knee. The loving ceremony was always gone through at forward the lower part of his threw these little meetings of the father and face, and by degrees gave the whole countenance an unpleasant and dogged his daughter. A year before the pre-sent date, he had returned from a long look. But that might have been mere an accident of posture. Still the tour on which he had been absent four blue eye did not look as bright and en ears, and had first seen his daughter, gaging as we might at first have sup-Blanche, since she was a baby. She had then, on her first visit to him, been She ed it to be. The warm hearted en thusiast seemed to disappear from it, carefully instructed by an old fashioned father and then say "Welcome home, dear father." And the air of naivete, and something colder take its place. This perhaps was more truly the man the other. The less agreeable look probably spoke the character, with which his little daughter had gone rather than the more agreeable. At through the ceremony, had offered in finite amusement to the old philosopher. least, so one might have judged, if he and he had told her that whenever ran his eye through the manuscript she came to see him she must always bow. On that first occawhich was lying on the red cloth of the table close at hand. It was an essay destined to appear in a week or two in sion, however, she had been place on laying the same claims to a place on the new did. She had sion, however, she had been far from a well known French periodical. It was an article on religion, fully in the spirit of the age, full of doubt, full of seemed almost as afraid of the old athee her father, as were the country chil anxious questions, full of theory. Yet not so full of the latter as some of the dren around. It was only after severa interviews that she began to notice how writings we see on the same subject. Or, if it was, l'athée had managed to pleased he was when she exhibited the little marks of affection which she had throw a semblance of practical reason. ing over his theorising, which left nothing conspicuously wild in it. There was a sober convincing air in been taught to show. Her mother she had known till she was five (she was now seven) and since then she had been almost the only one who was admitted every phrase, which, but for the utter into the old library to help the athee to anything like religious faith, and the great disrespect shown to all pass his lensly hours. She was regular that was considered most sacred by in her visits to him in the evening, the general French nation of the time, and usually brought him a bunch of the general French nation of the time, wild flowers, which had evidently been might have raised the author in our all of her own collecting and arrang-ing and tying up. She was full of ideas, and had always something to tell estimation as a man of grave and well-God bless his little Blanche. intentioned views. At least, he was in earnest in what he said, and if there was one impression more than another him of the plans she was going to carry which would remain on the mind of out, or the things she was soon about to get for him. She would listen to the reader of the essay, it was, that if the doubts expressed in it could be tales by the hour, as she sat on her father's knee, and would put all kinds satisfactorily explained, the author would not be a bigot in his opinions. of questions which were quite irrelevant to the main history, but which sug-The tone of inquiry was too earnest for that. Yet a Christian reader would gested themselves to her mind as the at the same time have felt that he had story proceeded. Then he would have to make up explanations, which led him often into fresh difficulties, till he here the work of a man who was more truly a pagan than Cicero or Piato. The superior claims of Christianity would go off laughing outright. Then were ignored, and the life of Christ she would kneel upon his knee, grasp ing his beard with both hands, and was treated merely as an interesting episcde in the general history of man with an air of the greatest curiosity ask him what he was laughing at. kind, and as leading to results that would have quite taken the country people aback if they could have been were worthy of study for the historian and philosopher. There was no hint of exaggeration or malice in any passage secreted in some gallery to watch the proceedings at these nightly interbut there was the perfect ignoring of views. It was quite astonishing to see how the old philosopher could become a divine tradition. The essay began with a history of religion. The chief systems of antiquity child again to satisfy and amuse his little daughter, One day she had were studied with care ; their common seen in the distance some little children playing horses. She had seen them points picked out ; their follies exposed ; their cruelties brought to light with a pair of reins fastened to a little the morality of their priests criticized, chap's arm, driving him along with a and in many places condemned. Then big stick. She was in great spirits about this, and full of it when she came the seeming need of some religion was dwelt upon ; the good which each had to her father in the evening. She told him all about it, and said : "You and done in its time to the people over whom it held sway. Then the author made a sudden and skillful transition. I might play, mightn't we, papa ?" Her papa did not object and put in a few He went forward to an imaginary suggestions as to how he should be har standpoint in the future, and looked back upon Christianity In the same nessed. Then the little driver pre pared herself with a good cane, and way as he had been looking back upon the papa trotted off round the table. religions of ancient times. the He soon found out that he had no mersimilarity of his treatment, the manner in which he picked out what he was ciful driver, and the blows he received pleased to call, the follies and the fault indiscriminately about the head and of the religion of his fathers, the skill ears and shoulders, were as lusty as the most dogmatic Christian in the neighwith which he traced the same great borhood ever wished he had the chance leading characteristics here, which he of administering to the old athee. But had found in the pagan creeds of old, Bianche thought that this was part of was all well calculated to lead the mind of a reader into his own groove of the game, and every now and then, descending from her assumed charac-ter, said : "Isn't it fun, papa?" Her thought-to look upon all religions as mere natural phenomena. The writer finished by drawing some conclusions which he said that everything tended papa had to call up all his philosophy and continued bed. to prevent himself from getting angry. However, he soon said that he was to confirm, viz., that all religion or worship of a Diety came from the tentired, to the surprise of the little coach man who was perfectly ready to condency of man to deify and personify great and mysterious influences tinue. He had, in fact, to assume ich he comes across, and that the istian has for the Supreme Ruler srsonification of his very abstract hich he

His god was formed as the ancients had formed theirs, by the personifica-tion of some little understood influence. The manner was the same, though the object was different ; that was all. She had the athes written, and evidently he wrote with facility. The writing had been quick, the flourishes were abundant, and the erasures few And now he sat at the cedar fire run ning on in the line of thought his writings had evoked, with a moody look upon his face, and the less pleas ing traits of his countenance growing more and more pronounced, as his head bent deeper down upon his clenched He did not look the wizard people fist. thought him (far from it), but his ex-pression was not of the pleasantesthough, of course, this might have been fancy. Suddenly he took his hand away from his chin and took up his watch, then looked across at the side entrance op-posite. Ah ! there was no mistake posite. now. His face had changed. It was unmistakably an agreeable face. His eye was kind and gentle now, and he wore a fond, expectant look as he gazed at the side door. He seemed to be listening for something. He tock up a little bouquet of wild flowers, tied up in a curious bungled knot with a piece under any persuasion. It was very seldom that they quarrelled in their nightly interviews. Blanche was so sensitive and so easily subdued that she was not often carried away to be really troublesome or disobedient. Once or twice he had had to tell her rather seriously not to say any more, but to go to bed, and she had trotted off looking quite ashamed of herself, and he had felt great pangs all night, thinking that he had been too cros with her, and so had to be additionally kind next night. One point there wa on which they differed. Almost as soon as she had become familiar enough to chat and say what she wanted to him, she had said one night as she was going to bed, and he had wished her good night, "Papa, say 'God bless my little Blanche.' " "What do you want me to say that for ; isn't good night enough ? "No ; mama always said "God bless

"Well, you know, mama said what I don't. Mama wore a nice frock like you and I don't." he said, trying to augh, though he felt himself in a cur lous position and could not tell why. Another time, as Blanche was going out of the room, she said "God bless you, dear papa." He looked at her as

THE CATHOLIO RECORD

going to reprove her, but checked himself and said, "There, trot off." "Now," she said, 'you ought to say 'God bless my little Blanche.'" He got out of the difficulty as best he could, but felt his awkward ness and hoped that Blanche would let the matter drop. But her sharp little eyes had noticed something curious in his manner at the time, and she wanted to know why he would not say "God bless you, my little Blanche." So one night when he had been espec ially kind to her, and had been patting her head and telling her that she was his "'own little Blanche.'" He was quite taken aback, but she went straight sn. "Why won't you say 'God bless you, my little Blanche." It was a question he could not answer ; he sat staring at the fire, wondering and wondering why it was that he could not say "God bless you, my little Blanche." It seemed that to say 'God bless you" every night to his little daughter would be quite impos sible, while at the same time he felt very loath to teil her, "Oa, there is no such as God." Yet why could he not say that? She had asked him one night if he thought that there were fairies in the long wood in front of the house and he had explained to her that fairles were all nonsense, that there was no such thing, and he had told her all this as something which at her age she ought to know. But now when she asked him why he did not say "God bless you," he did not find it at all the same thing for some unac countable reason. So he plunged into one of his deepest reveries as he gazed at the fire, and with something of an unpleasant expression on his face asked himself again and again why he would not say "Gcd bless you, my little Blanche;" while she, tired already and sleepy, lay against his arm and kept repeating in a dreamy way letting her arm bang against his knee every time she said it. " Why won' you say, 'God bless your little Blanche,'you naughty papa? Why blows and abuse. He was glad to be released and would not play again to me." "Hush, little one," he muttered. The thought that an evening would soon come when he could not g o her nor she to him rushed upon him. He walked out of the room and closed the door, and a violent outburst of sobs convulsed his strong frame. He felt a certain shame at sobbing thus like a child, and fought against it, but the waves are slow to subside after a great commotion, and half an hour later the athée father might have been seen in his library, determinedly trying to read, while every now and then a half suppressed sob told of the half spent storm. Another time he heard her mutter something. He leaned forward, she said: "Papa, say God bless my little Blanche." He at once answered, "God blêss you, my little Blanche, and make you better." She smiled triumphantly, murmuring, "I thought I would make you say it at last."

TO BE CONTINUED.

CHATS WITH YOUNG MEN. A Noble Son.

Dean Farrar tells a true story of noble son that is not without its applic ability to persons on this side of pond

"I recall," says that eminent clergy man, "a young man in his home-a very great and famous man whose name I must not mention. His was the case of a man of genius, born of parents who had no pretensions to genius at all, and who was incomparably in advance of his parents in culture and education. Many a young man so circumstanced has been tempted to give himself airs ; to look down up on his parents as inferiors, to shudde when they drop their h's; to condole with himself as the offspring of bourreois or plebian people of whom he is obliged to be ashamed. Not so the young man of whom I speak. He had taken as his rule of life the highest of all ideals-the ideal of Him 'Who went down to His parents at Nazareth and was subject unto them.' "I have sat at his table, and heard him pour forth the stores of his unex. ampled eloquence, and unroll the treasures of his large heart in lessons full of depth and beauty ;-and then his dear old mother-a perfect type of English middle class womanhood, with omething of the holy Philistinism of a narrow creed which invests its humest votaries with self-imagined infallibility-would lift up her monitory finger, before the assembled guests and say-" Now William -we will call him "William," though that was not name-" listen to me." Then, while he and we respectfully listened, she would lay down the law with exquisite placidity, telling him how completely mistaken he was in these new-fangled notions -

Proving all wrong that hitherto was writ, And putting us to ignorance again."

"Yes, mother," he would say, when her little admonition was ended ; and the conversation would resume its flow quite undisturbed, and the dear old lady was more than satisfied.

"It was the greatness of her son's genius which made him so good a son. A smaller mind would have winced or been contemptuous. 'Men do not make their homes unhappy because they have genius,' says Wordsworth, won't you say 'God bless your little Blanche,' you naughty papa?" until her head grew heavier and she fell asleep against his arm, still murmur-ble de seeing and feeling all the best because they have not enough genius; a mind and sentiment of a higher order would render them cap-able of seeing and feeling all the 'but because they have not enough

The best, and see that you get Labatt's, the best Domestic Ale and Porter on the market. As good as imported and will cost you less.

made himself famous by his works, keep mounting from the first : and though I have been repeatedly down again below sea level, and am scarce higher than when I started, I am as keen as ever for that enterprise."

This is the invincible spirit that will stumbles and falls, but persists in risslow and difficult the progress. bravely refuses to surrender, holding that its business is to meet these inevinovelist had his ideal. It was to write a great poem. He never achieved it, but he was content, he wrote, to "cobble little prose articles." He never wrote the great poem, but he took his failure in "excellent good spirits," and achieved success in a dif ferent line.

There is vast helpfulness in this thought, and for none more than for those who are concerned with the dis cipline of conscience. There are many failures in the Christian life. It was according to the divine plan that even our Lord in some respects should fail in His preaching-many refused to accept Him; He failed in his teaching-many refused to believe Him; He He failed to restore the Kingdom of Israel -they rejected Him ; He failed to convince the world of His mission-they crucified Him. He failed even with His own disciples, who fell away from Him and denied Him. There were some places where Ae could do no mighty works - the unbelief of the people thwarted Him. And yet He was not dismayed by failure. He did not even refuse to face the greatest seeming failure of His life -- that ignominious death on the cross. The greatness of His spirit was shown in the way He endured, in the cheerfulness that which He gave Himself in sacrifice.

The greatness of His triumph is beyond measure. He achieved a life unequaled in power and influence for good ; and the world with common ac cord points to His spotless character as the one perfect model for mankind. follow after Him meet many e who failures. Like the disciples, they disappear from His path sometimes, but, unlike Judas, who could not endure failure, they reappear and press forward again in good spirits.

a trial and secured some of them at the drug store, and after my boy had and yet he says of his career. "I mean to lead a life that should taken two boxes I could see the color coming back to his sallow complexion and noted a decided change for the better. He went on taking them and in a few months from the time he started to use them I considered him perfectly cured and not a trace of the not own itself beaten because it disease left, except his blind eye, the sight of which he had lost before he ing and pressing forward, however' started to use the pills. He has now become quite fleshy and I consider him one of the healthiest boys in the community. If any person is desirous of table failures in good spirits. The knowing the merits of Dr. Williams Pink Pills you may direct them to me, as I can highly recommend them to any person afflicted as my boy was.' Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure by going to the root of the disease. They renew and build up the blood, and strengthen the nerves, thus driving disease from the system. Avoid imitations by insisting that every box you purchase is enclosed in a wrapper bearing the fall trade mark, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. If your dealer does not keep them they will be sent postpaid at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Sneeze and Blow.

Sneeze and Blow. That is what you must do when you have catarrh in the head The way to cure this disease is to purify the blood with Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine soothes and heals the inflamed surfaces, rebuilds the delicate tissues and permanently cures catarrh by expelling from the blood the scro-fulous taints upon which it depends. Be sure to get Hood's.

The non irritating cathartic-Hood's Pills The non irritating cathartic—Hood's Pills There is danger in neglecting a cold... Many who have died of consumption dated their troubles from exposure, followed by a cold, which settled on their hungs, and in a short time they were beyond the skill of the best physician. Had they used Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, before it was too late, their lives would have been spared. This medicine has no equal for curing couples, colds and all affections of the throat and lungs. and lungs.

If attacked with cholera or summer complaint of any kind send at once for of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial and use it according to directions. It acts with wonderful rapidity in subdaing that dreadful discuss that weakens the strongest man and that destroys the young and deli-cate. Those who have used this cholera medicine say it acts promptly, and never fails to effect a thorough cure. fails to effect a thorough cure. Worms cause feverishness, moaning and restlessness during sleep. Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant, sure, and effectual. If your druggist has none in stock, get him to procure it for you. INDIGESTION, resulting from weakness of the stomach, is relieved by Hood's Sarsapar-illa, the greatest stomach tonic and cure for DYSPEPSIA.

ing and asking why he would not say

But these small encounters were rare and the old athee was not often put through this awkward self-analysis. They were happy evenings for both of them-a relief for the philosopher and a welcome opportunity for Blanche to show her affection for her papa. All the summer Blanche came and always had her little bundle of flowers, never very artistically arranged, and some times half composed of the uglies flowers she could have found, which she, however, thought the height of beauty. Winter came and she brought him picture books to look at and explain to her, and he would tell her stories round the winter fire. Winter went and the flowers came back and the big ugly leaves grew rank on the bank and in the woods, but there were no little hands to pick them now and no more visits to the library of the childish form in blue. There was a little sick room upstairs quite different to the big old library, and in it little Blanche lay very pale and very sick, and papa had now to come and visit her, not she him. Not only in the evening he came, but often during the day. He would go into the fields and woods now and make up bunches for the little invalid. He chose dock leaves and cow parsley, which had been favor ites of hers, and carefully bound them up in blue ribbon, and brought them to her, and she always seemed to think them nearly as beautiful as her own. He had tried her with fine bouquets from the hot-house sometimes, and she appeared not to like them half so well. She always fold him when he came that she would perhaps be well enough to get up to morrow, and pluck him some and show him the best places for flowers, but the morrow never brought improvement and each day she grew weaker and weaker. She had no idea that she was very ill, or, indeed, what exactly being very ill meant. She was only puzzed at this continued weakness

One night she was worse and he had come to sit with her. Her voice had left her, but he saw her lips move and she muttered something. He leaned forward to listen. "Papa," she said. forward to listen. "Papa," she said. "Yes, I am here," he answered sooth-ingly. "Papa, isn't it queer that I duty not to lose heart, not to give up beauty of domestic ties. '"

Are you better educated than your parents? Get down on your knees and thank God for giving you self-sacrificing forbears willing to grant to you what had been denied to them. and show you yourself worthy of their loving care by paying them back in love, since you have not the money, nor could enough of it be found, to wipe out your obligations to them.

The Discipline of Failure.

The really great men of the world are those who are not paralyzed by failures Success is rare excep through repeated failures. Those wh put all at risk on one venture, and, losing, weakly surrender, never ac-complish anything worth living for. Failures should enter into the natural expectation of everybody as a necessary, if painful, part of the discipline of life.

Few begin with anything like a clear view of what they want to do, and the fortune they seek may come in a very different form from that which they have kept in view. It may be a very large success and yet scarcely recognized. What many regard as a victory may really be a defeat, and men often mourn as losses what ought to be considered as gains. The child hat never falls never learns to walk Fails are failures which lead to suc-

Everything depends on how to take our failures. Robert Louis Stevenson, in one of the eleven rules he laid down for the discipline of conscience, declared :

"Oar business in this world is not to succeed, but to continue to fail in good spirits

This seems on first reading an inversion. Surely it is worth while to succeed ! How can it be our business to fail? Is failure, then, better than suc cess - a thing to be courted and work d Not at all. He means that failfor ? ures are numerous and constant. They stand thick in every pathway. We must make up our mind to meet them, and not to let them dishearten us. Here is the point. We are van-quished if we take a failure as final. We must not let it discourage us. We

A STRANGE CASE.

Eye Trouble Which Developed into Running Sores.

DOCTORS SAID IT WAS CONSUMPTION OF THE BLOOD, AND RECOVERY WAS LOOKED UPON AS ALMOST HOPFLESS - DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS WROUGHT A CURE.

From the Herald, Georgetown, Ont.

Our reporter recently had the pleas ure of calling on Mr. Wm. Thompson, papermaker, at Wm. Barber & Bros. mills, a well-known and respected citizen of our town, for the purpose of acquiring the details of his son's long illness and his remarkable recovery through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Mr. Thompson kindly gave us Pills. the following information which will speak for itself: "About two and a half years ago my eldest son, Garnet, who is fifteen years old, took what I supposed to be inflammation in his left He was taken to a physician, eve. who advised me to take him to an eye specialist which I did, only to find out that he had lost the sight of the eyecom pletely. The disease spread from his eye to his wrist, which became greatly swollen, and was lanced no le s than eleven times. His whole arm was completely useless, although he was not suffering any pain. From his wrist it went to his foot which was also lanced a couple of times but without bringing relief. The next move of the trouble was to the upper part of the leg where it broke out, large quantities of matter running from the sore. All this time my boy was under the best treatment I could procure, but with little or no effect. The trouble was pronounced consumption of the blood, and I was told by the doctors that you would not come across a case like it in five hundred. When almost discouraged and not knowing what to do for the best, a friend of mine urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills say shall fail and fail often ; but it is our with a somewhat similar disease and duty not to lose heart, not to give up with a somewhat similar disease and

AVOID INITATIONS, which are