Saturday, 17th June, 1916. PROGRESS OF THE WAR

[June 8 to June 14] On the Western front, in the week under review, furious fighting prevailed, especially about Verdun and in the Ypres salient. In the first day of the week the Germans finally, after over four-months' endeavor, succeeded in taking Fort Vaux, or what remained of it, and this is the nearest point to Verdun which they have been able to reach; and during the remainder of the week they kept up the attack at other points of apeach to Verdun, both east and west of the Meuse, making some progress but failing to reach their goal. To the east and south-east of Ypres the week witnessed some of the fiercest fighting of the war, and the British (of whom the Canadians formed a conspicuous part) were forced to yield some ground, most of which they subsequently regained. So the Western front was not materially changed during the week. In the Russian campaign in Europe some of the most remarkable achievments of the war took place. From the Pripet marshes south to the border of Rumania the Russians continued their drive against the Hun armies, here principally Austrian and Hungarian troops, and not only made great advances but captured nearly 200, 000 prisoners and enormous quantities of munitions and military supplies of all sorts. At some points a gallant defence was made and the fiercest fighting took place; but at other points the Austrian troops fled in precipitate haste, leaving their supplies behind them. At the week's close Lutsk and Dubno had been retaken and held by the Russians, who were spreading out northward to Kovel and bevond; and they were closely investing Pioneer Battalion at St. Andrews were in Czernowitz, which they were practically town on Saturday and they were the most surrounding, and were approaching Lem- noisy and undesirable visitors the town berg from the north-east, east and south- has had for a long time. LONG FURROWS The plower plows with cruel blade Green, of this place, were united in mar-Red steel and gas-cloud's gasping hell, ripped in the trenches' ice-cold flood Auscle and nerve, and flesh and blood, One with all mortal pain and woe His grief on the cross-tree long ago, Flesh of our flesh, furrowed and torn By nail and lash, by lance and thorn.

Earth brings forth from her broken sod Bread for the eater, oil and wine; The simple soldier, commonplace, From heaven upon his blinded face; By powerless limbs, and heart of might Unlaureled conquerors that win, Further than prince and paladin To courage for pain's lonely ways Through all their mutilated days; By fruit of sacrifice we know;

By harvest's fateful flag unfurled,

What life, what love, what graces grow rom the long furrows of the world. Maple Sugar Eleanor Alexander, in The Times, Lond
