WATERLOO—Warden S. Cassel and County Clerk Bowman, Police Magistrate G. G. A. Weir and Rev C. R. Miller, inspector Children's Aid society, of Berlin; Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Elmira; Mr. Weaver, Hespeler.
ELGIN—Warden Jackson and son, Mr. E. L. Dickie, secretary of Toronto's Social Service Commission, was an interested visitor.

The tour of the farm commenced with the new administration building and dormitories. Dr. Bruce Smith was waiting on the hillside, where the big stone wall would be if there was one, for the first party of visitors. The new offices are beautifully finished, and will soon be occupied by the staff.

Nearing Completion

The great, new three story dormitory building in the rear is well on to completion. There was no trouble in recognizing the mission of the cells with their reinforced concrete walls. Dormitory accommodation will be 600. Every room will have a half day's sun, since the windows face east and west.

have arranged to have you before the parole board next time."
"Thank you, Mr. Hanna," said the man. "You will put in a word for me?"
"Yes, I will."
"We take a census twice a day," said Dr. Gilmour, continuing an explanation of the rules; "once when the men are at the noon meal and again when they go to bed. You cannot remember 300 faces. The faces of these men at dinner now will measure up to those of the men in any factory."

A number of the visitors were heard to make similar comment on the intelligent faces of the prisoners. "There was a time when I looked for the 'criminal type,' that I read about in classical books on criminology," said the warden. "I failed to find it. There is no criminal type. Of 750 prisoners I can count on the fingers of one hand those you would call incorrigible."

On to the Kitchen.

The visitors passed on to the kitchen, with its big ranges. One man there wore a white coat. He was the only free laborer. All the rest were sentenced men. The party saw the spotlessly clean dairy stables; drank buttermilk—some of them—in the dairy building; saw where the hydro line, which lights the place across the farm; viewed the orchard of 1,800 young trees, the filtration plant, and the big herd of Holsteins. Professor S. E. Toad, whose fame as district representative in Lambton went abroad before he was called to wider fields, explained the new features in his department—the agricultural and dairy. After dinner the party saw the great stone quarry and its busy workmen and machines.

term prisoners that you cannot teach trades but they can work at stonework; and all municipalities require stone for roads."

"Uniting, you should get an organization that will command, not a jailer at $400 a year," said Mr. Hanna, "but something that will be worth while taking hold of, and men worth while in charge. Get out of your heads entirely any thought of expensive building. Any change we would make in our original plans here would be in cheaper construction—I don't mean less secure. My thought would be a work-camp, a place where you can exercise care over those who are unfortunately wards of the public and inmates of your jails. I do not mean gates and bars; you do not need them so much, but all the time you must know where the men are, what they are doing, and have somebody keeping them at it."

"I hope within the next year to demonstrate by giving the central prison a separate account and crediting at market rates what we produce for our own public institutions, and charging us with every dollar in the way of maintenance, including administration, that we will not only pay the whole cost, but would hope to have a nice dividend that would be the property of the province and which would, in the nature of things, I think, find its way into distribution among those who are dependent on those here. That is not a statement made on the hustlings or at a picnic in the bush but after we have gone into the figures as particularly as we can. I see Lucas pricking up his ears to see if it is so."

Oxford's Warden Pleased.
"I am more than pleased with what has been done here," said the warden.

the Fort William farm was proving to the Western Provinces.

County Clerk Bowman of Waterloo, brought up the matter of distribution of cost between province and county, but Dr. Smith said all was provided for in the Prisons Act for 1912, brought in by Mr. Hanna.

Mr. Bowman admitted that good results were not being obtained from county jails.
