Gaspe, Sept. 10.—A serious riot has broken out among the fishermen at Fox River, about forty miles from here. The trouble is said to be caused by local agitators working up a bad class of people a few miles west of Fox River. The closing dance of the R. H. Y. C. was held last night, and although large numbers have gone down for every dance, there were many more last evening than ever before. The verandas were thronged with Beach and city residents who were taking just as much pleasure watching the dancers as were the participants themselves. The orchestra, under Mr. Lomas' direction, which is always excellent and very generous with encores, was increased to eight pieces. Commodore Lennox presented with encores, was increased to pieces. were the best of friends. And to-day you are all at daggers drawn. Why do you do it? Does a women always have to be fussing and fuming at some other woman. Now men don't do that. We don't gossip and we don't tell tales and we don't backbite. I think you are in the wrong in this affair you did ranke the statement and I think you should go straight to Mrs. Smythe Jones and apolegize. Then— Toward the end of the Justweds' stay at By-the-Sad-Sea-Waves a certain incident was brought to Mr. J's. intimate notice that left him a wiser and a sadder man. Mr. J. drew himself up in that righteous, blessed-are-the-peacemakers style.
"You will do nothing of the sort, the work of the sort that the best of the work of it—in the way men do. Now you sit right here until I raturn."

And he went off in search of Mrs. Tom Brown, He found her sitting tranquilly at the far corner of the veranda, busy with her needle.

"Mrs. Tom Brown," he began. "My wife and Mrs. Smythe-Jones have just had a little misunderstanding—and I want you to help me straighten it out. This morning, you remember, when bridge was proposed, Mrs. Justwed remarked to you that she simply wouldn't play bridge with Mrs. Smythe-Jones. Somebody told Mrs. Smythe-Jones of the unfortunate and junpardonable statement of my wife's and a scene ensued. My wife savs that you told Mrs. Smythe-Jones about—" ly from Mrs. J's. So Mr. J. couldn't for the life of him see why Blossom should be so fond of one woman and so antago nistic to another-which shows that Ho

But he "got wise" to a few things con-cerming social relations between women, one morning after breakfast. The hotel guests had wandered out on the veranda in that lazy, come-what-will fashion that proves the aftermath of every good breakfast at the senside. Some one had nymoned "bridge":

their wives.
But what was his surprise, this particular morning, to hear Blossom reply, when Mrs. Tom-Brown suggested getting Mrs. Smythe-Jones to complete a table at "bridge":
"Anyone but her, my dear! I simply can't play bridge with her!"
Mr. J. was on the point of expostulating on the matter when Smythe-Jones happened along and took Homer-dear off to the bowling alleys. But his wife's surprising statement hung in his mind all morning. "Mr. Justwed, she said, with fine scorn, "this is the rudest thing I ever had said to me by a man who was supposed to be a gentleman.! I did not tell Mrs Smythe-Jones. I bid you good-morning! I shall see your wife immediately."

prising statement hung in his mind all morning.

And just as they were waiting for dinfer, a few hours later, Mrs. Smythe-Jones came up to them. She was madmad clear through. Her eyes were ablaze and her approach determined. Mrs. Justwed was all solicitude at once.

"Whatever is the matter, my dear?" she asked anxiously and sympathetically. Mrs. Smythe-Jones drew herself up haughtily.

"Don't you 'my dear' me, Mrs. Justwed!" she exclaimed. "If you 'simply won't play bridge' with me, you simply can't speak to me—and the sooner you understand that, the better!"

"Why—why—Cora—" began Mrs. J.
