SUGAR IN INDIA.

Something About the Crops in That Mighty Country.

Since the opening of the war the imports of sugar into British India have decreased some 400,000 tons, presumably freights that amount of eastern sugar for the use of the western world. As this decrease is not due to decreased consumption owing to high war prices, but to increased home production stimulated by higher prices, the release is substantial.

The peculiar thing about India is that, whereas it is the second largest sugar producing region on the globe, its production is insufficient even for home requirements. There are 300,000,000 persons in India, and roughly there is an acre of cane and a ton of sugar for every 100 inhabitants of the Empire. This gives each inhabitant about 22 pounds of sugar per annum, which is not enough, so Java's sugars have been drawn upon to make up the deficiency.

The increase in production has been about 1,000,000 tons, of which 500,000 tons were attained in the last crop finished in March, 1918. Since that date Java sugar has continued to go to India in normal quantity, but as shown by H. C. Primm Goertler in the International Sugar Journal, the movement of these sugars inland from Indian ports has been very slow.

As a result of the war, he says, India has increased its import duty on sugar from 5 to 10 per cent ad valorem. This, combined with scanty arrivals from Java due to lack of ships, had advanced the price of home-grown India sugar to a point which induced the native sugar planters to increase their sugar output. "For a number of years," he continues, "the Indian Government had taken measures to improve the cane cultivation and sugar manufacture by establishing experimental stations and farms by introducing new cane varieties, and better mills and evaporating apparatus, in order to try and increase the production of sugar per unit of area. These efforts had on the whole been successful, but the crop of the native planters had up to now not shown much interest in the matter. In these days of high sugar prices, however, they see how great the advantages of a better crop may be to them and how they profit by all the work which has been done for their benefit over whole series of years. The consequence is that a large part of the interior of India can act on very well without supplies from overseas and that the supplies lying at the Indian ports have remained to a large extent idle."

The sowings for the crop just opening were estimated by the India Trade Journal of August 23 as 2,550,000 acres against 2,552,000 acres for the last crop, which out-turned 3,229,000 tons.

However, growing conditions have not been quite so favorable this year as last, and a smaller output is predicted. Several conditions are being tried, which, according to the Journal, not only favorably in their effect on cane growing, but also in their effect on the health of the cane, the necessity of the cane-grower to use the cane for the greater part of the crop. Production has been fairly good in the Punjab, Madras, Deccan, and generally throughout.

Army Pigeon Letters.
One of the many uses to which London pigeon lofts are put in France is as a home for pigeons. Outside of the omnibus is roofed in to form a cage, while the men occupy the inside—or rather, three quarters of the inside, because the front part is also part of the cage, which is entered by a door from the men's room, and also by a door at the top of the back staircase.

There is an opening in the front of the cage cleverly arranged to let the birds enter when they return from their flights, but not to let the men enter when they are inside. A board is delicately poised just inside the opening, so that when a bird steps on it an electric bell rings inside the omnibus, to tell the men that a pigeon has come home.

The pigeons are taken out in baskets to the trenches to bring messages back in case the very communications should be cut by the enemy's fire. If not wanted for this purpose they are sent flying back after twenty-four hours with a message, just for practice.

As soon as the bird arrives at the loft a man creeps into the cage, catches it, reads the message, writes it down in duplicate, and sends an orderly at once with a copy to the signal officer, whence it is sent forth like an ordinary telegram to its destination. Birds are always sent in couples, each with the same message, in case one should be shot by the enemy.—Tit-Lits.

A New Fuel.
Because of the fuel shortage that is facing the United States and Canada a new fuel is to be introduced known as "carbocool." A plant is being erected in Virginia for the production of this substance which is a by-product. Its use has been tested by the United States navy and two railroads, which pronounce it a valuable smokeless fuel. By a new process bituminous coal is treated in such a manner as to recover greater quantities of such valuable by-products as tinsel, sulphate of ammonia and valuable oils. From the residue is made the smokeless fuel "carbocool" in the form of briquettes.

Camels as War Animals.
The importance of camels in transporting war supplies across the deserts has officially been recognized by the sultan of Egypt. Special medals were conferred recently upon native members of the camel corps for war service at exercises at which the presentations were made by the sultan.

RIN RITCHIE
Newcastle, June 19—A very pleasant event took place in the Salvation Army hall here, last night, when Captain Ritchie, the commandant, was married to Evelyn H. Six. The ceremony was performed by Registrar Moore, of St. John, assisted by Adjutant Best. Many were present and partook of the banquet at the close.

Pipe Smoking By English Women

London, June 19—Pipe-smoking by women will be no longer common to the poverty-stricken or rural districts, according to tobaccoists here. One member of trade has disclosed publicly that short cigarettes of large diameter are smoked in holders resembling pipes by numerous women of all stations at this time. It is supposed that this practice will lead to the appearance soon of highly ornamental pipes for women for use with real pipe tobacco.

Tobaccoists declare that increasing consumption by women accounts for the shortage of cigarettes. Some of the London papers print today pictures of an officer and his wife smoking cigarettes together. The pictures are of the ceremony, the bride still wearing her wedding gown. The women smokers are seen at the smoking table and on the Thames at a dinner party given before many of them are becoming prominent in selling their own cigarettes.

Hyethorn's old class on the town pump has about the best of many years as found an interesting population, but now that the "Mays" have gone, the town pump as an institution has disappeared. It is the irony of fate at work again.

TAKE NO ADVANTAGE OF FOE

Fuedists in Italy and South America Display Signs of Chivalry That is Remarkable.

Before one can truly realize the terrible depravity to which human nature can occasionally descend one has to obtain just a hazy idea of that horror of horrors known by the name "vendetta." This means the suffering, fear sometimes engendered by these awful feuds it is impossible to paint in language too denuncatory, observes a writer in London Answers.

A gentleman not long returned from South America described the other day the and of a vendetta he had the misfortune to witness in the Boca (most quarter) of Buenos Aires. The antagonists had their knives strapped to their hands so that the weapons could not possibly drop from their fingers, however badly injured they became. Before the police had separated them one of the murderers in the Boca (most quarter) had received no less than 17 wounds. On being examined it was discovered that this individual had a loaded revolver in his belt.

"Whyever did you not use your firearm?" asked the perfect police.
"No," the man replied, "I was afraid to shoot the other, with a gun, and the next moment he sank unconscious to the ground."

In Naples, where warring of a vendetta is almost invariably given in private, a member of the Camorra is sometimes called in to settle a dispute, and in this way occasionally what might otherwise have been a brutal feud ends in the chink of glasses at a sumptuous banquet. If a Camorrist meets his death at the hands of a foe it becomes the bounden duty of some other member of the Camorra to avenge it, notice being almost invariably given to the relatives of the deceased that it is absolutely unnecessary for them to take any steps in the matter whatever.

In Naples, curiously enough, the sympathy of the people is much more with the murderer in these cases than with the victim, judging that if he had had no grievance the former would never have bared his blade; and it is quite surprising how far people are prepared to go in order to protect him from the law.

It is an unwritten law among the hot-blooded races among whom the vendetta still exists that, in an open street fight, no adversary must be assailed with a knife until he has had time to unclasp his own.

Not the least extraordinary feature of several of the vendettas is the refusal on the part of its dying victims to disclose the name of those who have mortally wounded them.
