Mr. Jacob H. Mackey, 326 Midland Ave., Midland, Ont. writes:—
"I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for over 20 years and I feel that I owe my life to them. I suffered severely from rheumatism and heart failure. One doctor just gave me one year to live, and even told me I might be found dead at any time. A neighbor advised Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and I have been using them as needed ever since. I am now 70 years of age, weigh 217 pounds and can work as well as any young man."

At the Mouth of the Treacherous Pit

STORY OF LOVE, INTRIGUE AND REVENGE

CHAPTER XXXVIII

"Why should you add even one more dismal recollection to the sad memories of your life?" Gertrude asked, and Dolores gave up the wish.

They did not know, either mother or daughter of the sad work that was being done that night. It was as though half the town of Deeping were awake. Lord Fielden had given orders that every preparation for a funeral should be made at Fielden Manor. He asked Gertrude to promise that Lady Allanmore should not leave her room until the next day, when he would ask to see her. Never did man work with such energy—indeed he worked so hard that he almost lost sight of the reward in view.

When the shadows of evening fell, he went with a picked body of brave men. They had ropes and ladders and a ladder, in case their search was successful. Three of the men had volunteered to descend the disused shaft.

They formed a weird group—the little crowd of men standing round the long-forgotten pit. The first thing that Lord Fielden ordered was that the mass of dead wood and creepers should be removed, and the mouth of the pit laid bare. It took some time to do this; and when it was effected, the men cried out in horror. A great, gaping chasm, black as night, yawned before them.

"It was neither more nor less than a death-trap," said Lord Fielden. "Covered in that treacherous fashion, I wonder that many others did not fall into it. It ought to have been walled round."

They soon discovered that there was no water in the pit; and then, amidst breathless silence, two men were gently lowered. The lookers-on stood round in grim silence, waiting for the signal their comrades were to give to be drawn up again. At last it came, and the men began slowly and carefully to draw up the ropes. When those from below reached the surface, the pallor of their faces showed weirdly in the torchlight. The leader, Robert Simmons, went straight to Lord Fielden. "My lord," he said, "it is there."

"What is there?" asked Harry, hardly able to control his emotion.
"The skeleton, my lord, of what was once Sir Karl Allanmore."
A solemn hush fell on them all. Found at last—he who had been lost and believed guilty all these years!
"I will go down with you," said Lord Fielden; and, in spite of all remonstrance, he carried out his resolution.

It was a terrible place, but not so horrible as he had imagined. The pit was very deep, and dark as night; but, to all appearance, there was nothing living in it—no rats, no creeping reptiles. The walls were dry and hard, if ever there had been water, it had long since dried up. Lord Fielden shuddered as he glanced around.

The three men standing by looked at each other in horror. Who was to be the first to touch what remained of the baronet? It lay a few inches from the spot, immediately under the opening.
"He must have been dead, I should think, when he reached the ground," remarked Lord Fielden.
With reverent hands he examined what had once been the body of one of the handsomest and kindest of men.

There was nothing repulsive about it. It was but a white and perfect skeleton. The clothes Sir Karl had worn were mildewed, and fell to pieces at a touch, the gold watch and chain were not broken, and one of the men noticed that the former had stopped at twenty minutes past nine.

"That must have been the time at which he met with the accident," said Lord Fielden.

It was noon of the day following when Gertrude asked her mother if she would go downstairs. Dolores, worn out with her sorrows, had slept the sound sleep of exhaustion; but Gertrude, lying by her side, had heard the solemn tramp of the burden-bearers, and knew what had been brought home.

"They have found him, mamma," said, gently, "just where he fell; and Harry says he must have died before he reached the ground, so that he could not have suffered much. It was only the intense agony of one moment, and then all was over."

Dolores grasped her daughter's arm.
"What is that?" she cried, trembling from head to foot. "What is it Gertrude?"

A QUEEN UNCROWNED

THE STORY IN THE LONE INN

CHAPTER I.

Over this door was a dapping sign, with an uncomfortable-looking female painted on it, who held a comb in one hand, and a small pocket mirror in the other, into which she was gazing with an expression of the most violent astonishment, evidently lost in wonder as to how on earth she had ever got there—as she very well might, indeed; for it was an uncomfortable, not to say distressing place for anybody to be, much less a mermaid. A striking trait about this lady was, that after beginning like any other reasonable Christian, she suddenly and impetuously, and without the smallest provocation, saw fit to branch off into a startling tail, which turned up so that the tip stood on a level with her head, and left her precisely in the shape of the letter 'U'. Under this extraordinary female was painted, in glaring, yellow capitals, "The Mermaid," and there was a popular legend extant, to the effect that the picture above was a striking likeness of one of those fishy individuals that had been captured by a former proprietor of the inn, while she was combing her sea-green tresses down on the shore. For the truth of this enrapturing I am not, however, prepared to vouch in this authentic story, as I have only popular tradition for it.

Toward this inviting-looking dwelling, our two solitary travelers were betaking themselves, at a leisurely pace, each seemingly absorbed in his own thoughts. Captain Nicholas Tempest, having insinuated about half a yard of twisted tobacco into his mouth, was discharging right and left, with that benign expression of countenance men always wear when chewing the weed; and with both hands thrust in his trousers pockets, he swaggered along with an independent swag, that said, as plainly as words: "I'm Captain Nick Tempest, sir, and I don't care a curse for any man!" His handsome companion kept by his side, stepping carefully to avoid the mud, lest it should sully the shining brightness of his Spanish leather boots, and smiling slightly as he caught the contemptuous glances

TODAY I AM REAL WELL

So Writes Woman After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Jameson, N. Y.—"I was nervous, easily excited and discouraged and had no ambition. Part of the time I was unable to sit up as I suffered with pains in my back and with weakness. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, both the liquid and tablet form, and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sensitive Wash for inflammation. Today I am real well and can do a routine house and do the work. I recommend your medicine to every woman who complains, and you may use my letter to help any one else. I am passing through the Change of Life now and I keep the Vegetable Compound in the home, ready to take when I feel the need of it."
—ANGIE D. DAZEN, 202 W. Second St., Jameson, N. Y.

Often some slight encouragement may create a general upset condition of the whole system, indicated by such symptoms as nervousness, headache, lack of ambition and general weakness.
—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will be found a splendid medicine for such troubles. In many cases it has removed the cause of the trouble.

Captain Nicholas Tempest, transferring his quid, with an adroit roll of the tongue, that bespoke long and accomplished practice, to the other cheek, and having discharged a startling fire of tobacco juice, gave his pantaloons a hoist and glancing toward his companion, at length lifted up his voice and spoke.

"Well, my little shaver, you've got to America, at last, you see, all safe in wind and limb; though, by George, we did come pretty near going to Davy's locker once or twice during the passage. And now what do you think of it, eh? Hardly equal to the vine-clad hills of sunny Spain, you see, my lad. Rather a dreary and desolate prospect, just at present, ain't it?"

"Yes, somewhat so," said the lad, as he measured intently with his eye a pool of water in his path, and then leaped lightly over it. His voice was soft and musical in the extreme, and was rendered still more so by his foreign accent, though he spoke in excellent English.

"And how that you've got here, Master Jacinto, what do you mean to do with yourself, if it's a fair question?"

"Perfectly fair, Captain Tempest. I mean to take excellent care of myself," said the lad, carelessly.

"Humph! you do—do you? Boys have queer notions about taking care of themselves. I suppose your next move will be for New York City."

"That depends."
"Depends on what?"
"Well, on a good many things generally, and on one thing in particular."

"And what is that one thing? Don't be so cursed secretive, you little Jackanape! I tell you what, my young cove, you had better keep on the right side of me; for it will be the tallest feather in your cap, if you have the friendship of Captain Nick Tempest. Mind that!"
"I am much obliged to Captain Nick Tempest, and would not offend him for any earthly consideration," said the young Spaniard, in a tone of provoking indifference, as he tightened his sash; "but, at the same time, he must allow me to decline making him my confidant, more especially as it is totally out of his power to aid me in the slightest degree."
Captain Nick Tempest came to a sudden halt, and with his hands still in his pockets, faced around in the middle of the road, his swarthy face flushed, and his brows contracting with rising anger, but, as his eyes fell on the slight, boyish form of the other, he checked himself, and said, in a tone of withering scorn, as he moved on:

Salvaging Sunken Ships

Between 8,000 and 10,000 ships, of which nearly 6,000 are British, it is estimated, are lying on the ocean bed. These sunken hulks are reckoned to account for about 15,000,000 gross tons, and their estimated value is $225,000,000 at pre-war shipping rates.
With their cargoes, the ships below the sea are worth a fabulous amount—experts put the figures at $1,200,000,000 roughly.
There is need for the ships as well as their cargoes, and there is small doubt that the salvage engineer will be kept busy for years hence.
Ships of less than 2,000 tons can usually be raised bodily by means of pontoons; ships above such a mark require often more ingenious handling.
Pontooning is employed whenever possible for salvaging sunken ships; the second method is for ships to be pumped and floated, which means that divers must go down, locate holes, and mend them with plates, before the ship is pumped free from water and raised again.
In a third method compressed air is used to force the water out of the ship at the bottom of the ocean.
An American has invented a salvage submarine which can have its door open below water without letting water into the ship. A European salvage company, too, have a patent underwater ship which carries several

Appears Against Her Brother in Murder Case
Halifax, N.S. July 30.—(By Canadian Press)—Marie Davis, 14 years of age, was called to the witness box in police court recently in connection with two charges laid against her brother, the murder of Police Officer Charles Fulton and the attempted murder of Stave Kennedy, also a member of the Halifax police force. With a voice scarcely audible, she recounted the events which led up to the shooting in the woods bordering the Dutch Village Road, when officer Kennedy was seriously wounded. She had been standing near the officer when he fell, and although she had not been able to see her brother at the time, she said that she fired the shot which hit Kennedy. When the girl was apprehended her clothes were in ribbons from her hiding in the bush, and in this guise she appeared in court.
