Announcement Extraordinary! Unrivalled Success! Unequalled Display! Competition Defeated!

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS WORTH OF DRY GOODS TO SELECT FROM!

Heffernan Brothers have great pleasure in announcing to their patrons that, in view of the great advance which they knew must inevitably take place in the price of woollen goods they were careful to place their orders with the leading European and Canadian manufacturers fully three months in advance of any house west of Toronto, and by means of a large cash capital have been able to make special and most advantageous terms, and are now prepared to show a large and magnificent assortment of NEW DRY GOODS AT OLD PRICES.

CATALOGUE:

We here give a short catalogue of prices in a few of the leading departments, but for a full and correct idea of the immensity of the stock and the unparalleled low prices of goods we invite every one to call and inspect the stock. One visit to our Mammoth Establishment will convince even the most incredulous that Heffernan Brothers advertise facts only, and that the Britannia House is beyond doubt the cheapest store in Western Canada.

CHAPTER XVIII.

WHICH EXPLAINS THE CAUSE OF LILLIAS GIBSON'S GRIEF. He rose and walked slowly from the room, leaving Lillias sitting like one who had been turned to stone. For a time she was without the power alike of motion and of feeling—conscious only of having received a great stunning blow, by which her whole being was prostrated, but the very strength of which kept back the suffering and the anguish.

Her state of numbness for that first half-hour was a merciful, an enviable condition, compared with the agony which was slowly but surely coming. Gradually she awoke to it. First, there came a sense of loss—a sense of separation from the hope and joy which had been growing in her heart, and filling her being with the sweet delicious rapture in which she had been indulging when her maiden meditations were disturbed by the entrance of her father. The possession of this happiness was receding from her. The fulness of delight which she had begun to taste with such thrilling raptures, was departing from her like a thing not to be retained. That heaven of bliss, which her love for George had begun to create in her soul, was closing its portals against her; its light and glory, its peace and radiance were vanishing, and she felt herself thrust back, and shut out in the dreary night-darkness, where no joy and no comfort could come. This loss was in itself terrible and overwhelming, but that was not all: there was not only the vision of departing hope, but the prospect of coming misery, if this marriage with Duncan Ralston was to be forced upon her. She would then become the wife of a man whom she must ever abhor, when every feeling of love and sympathy would be crushed out of her nature, when her life would be without one pleasure, and her surroundings wholly repulsive.

Thus it was a double weight of woe that came upon her, and, as her thoughts came more clearly to realise it, her horror and despair increased till she could sit there no longer, but wildly sprang from her seat and rushed in desperation through the room.

The chamber was now in semi-darkness, for while she had sat, the fire, so bright at first, had burned low; its flame had died out, and nothing but dull, glowing embers remained in the grate, sending thence a light too faint to dissipate the gloom.

But, outside, the moon was shining brightly in the clear frosty sky, and she caught sight of the silvery landscape, and as she gazed, the desire came upon her to wander forth, and in the solitude of the park find some vent to the struggling of her bursting heart. In motion she thought she would find some relief—the sharp night air, blowing on her burning brow might cool the fever of her brain.

Hastily snatching up a shawl, she quitted the room, and descending by a private stair, made her exit by a side door, and gained the park, across which she took her way, regardless of the direction in which she went, and so wildly possessed by her grief that unconsciously she lifted her despairing face towards the soft beaming light, and occasionally flung her arms upward as she moved along.

By instinct, rather than of set purpose, she walked toward a clump of trees on the other side of which stood an arbour, and the sight of it, solitary and deserted sent her toward it of shelter and rest. She entered, threw herself upon the rustic seat, and then the tide of her agony, rising with a resistless wave which burst upon her soul, she threw her arms upon the table, laid her head down upon them, and gave way to loud convulsive sobbing, which was wholly beyond her power to restrain.

In the midst of this outburst of wildest grief, a shadow suddenly darkened the arbour, and a voice reached her ear. In terror she started up, and gazed wildly at the form which stood in the doorway, believing that her father had seen and followed her.

It was not her father. It was George Eglington, and as he rushed forward, and in tones of tender anxiety called her by her name and asked the cause of her distress, an impulse, which she was powerless to control, caused her to fling her arms round his neck, bury her face in his bosom, and renew her weeping there, with a vehemence which his soothing words could not for a time subside.
