HOW IT FEELS AND COSTS TO RIDE IN A PRIVATE CAR

Daughters of the Rich Pay $90 a Day To Ride in Privacy.

CHARTER YACHTS

J. P. Morgan Keeps His Corsair Under Steam Continually.

By EDITH BRAUN.
Special to The Advertiser.

New York, July 16.—I have never eaten such breakfast elsewhere as I have had on a private car. The kitchen quarters are complete; the colored cook is the master of his trade.

Society people either own a private car, lease one by the year or engage one by the trip.

The cars have a living and dining room together, very well appointed bedrooms, a bathroom with shower, and an observation platform. Those that are private property usually are more luxurious, being especially fitted out.

For short trips into suburbs, New York society does not use a private car, excepting for a boat race, a country place or for a boat race, when the cars are needed for sight-seeing. For the short run to Atlantic City, undertaken several times a year for rest purposes, private cars are sometimes ordered out, however.

With trip to Atlantic City, I learn that the railway charge for attaching a private car to any regular train is an amount equal to 25 passenger fares for the distance. When the car is not in use, the railway charges $2.40 each 24 hours, or fraction thereof, for dead storage on a siding.

To charter a private car from the Pullman company costs $90 a day, with a cook and two attendants included. For two or more days the charge decreases to $60 a day. The charter a sleeping car or compartment car costs $34 a day, at least a three days' engagement being required. The Pullman company also provides catalogues of all the cars to prospective lessees. It also agrees to provision all private cars at cost plus a 25 per cent handling charge.

Some Own Whole Fleets.
As soon as the New York family decides upon a trip to Atlantic City, it is necessary to notify the passenger agent of the railway over which the trip is to be made of the location of the private car and the train to which it is to be attached.

The high society family is in an attitude of so completely insulated against discomfort and herding that it has not only private cars, but private ocean-going yachts. Many do not own yachts, but they charter one or more of the sea. They charter a yacht when they need one. Some have whole fleets.

J. P. Morgan, for example, has his Corsair kept under steam the year around, upon the chance he may want to go away to the Mediterranean or wherever. Mr. Morgan's fleet of smaller vessels for his own use and enjoyment—steam and gasoline boats—amounts to a considerable number, and in one of them he can sail from his Long Island country place to the Manhattan pier of the New York yacht club at East Twenty-Third street.

By the way, there is no parking place for automobiles so crowded as this East Twenty-third street pier every fair day. Most New York men of wealth, with country places along the water, commute in their own boats, which usually are the type of motor craft known as express cruisers.

The ocean-going craft cost as much as $3,500,000, complete with furnishings and the most complete outfit to include great pipe organs. I learn from one Fifth avenue man that his yacht costs him $5,000 a month for maintenance, this not including the cost of replacement of parts. Rent, of course, is nil; the yachts are moored in free water and are not in commission.

Carry a Crew of 60.
The yachts are occasionally leased for a three-month season, and except in the case of some of the extra-dimly costly ones, the price yielded by such a charter is between twelve and twenty per cent of the value of the craft.

Some of the yachts have crews of sixty, commanded by an experienced sea captain whose salary averages about $200 a month. Ordinarily the master of the yacht sees that his country place, his factory or his shipping office absorbs a large part of the crew when the yacht is not in commission.

Then there are the palatial houses.
