

in the establishment of a resident local magistracy in the hands of the lessees, and the missionaries, who may be authorised to determine immediately, and on the spot, all questions of small consequence, combining this system with an arrangement for bringing the more important causes (such as may arise between the lessees of different districts), as speedily and directly as possible, to the great and pure fountain of English Law at Westminster, without passing through the muddy channel of colonial judicature.

FINIS.