Supply—Resources and Development of Mines and Surveys is responsible for are topographic, hydrographic and geodetic surveys and the like.

Mr. Fulton: I thought the minister said geological surveys was one type.

Mr. Winters: I said zoology, archaeology, ethnology and botany; surveys in natural history.

Mr. Fulton: In connection with this item, which is $31,000 for this year, how are the costs differentiated from travelling expenses?

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): They are not.

Mr. Fulton: They are a separate item.

Mr. Winters: The travelling expenses of the people engaged in those survey parties are included in that $31,000.

Mr. Fulton: Just the people in the survey parties?

Mr. Winters: Just the people in the survey parties. The other people in the museum who travel have their travelling expenses shown under the other item.

Mr. Adamson: Has the minister the report on the pre-glacial botanical discovery made by Dr. Porsild comparatively recently in the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Winters: The report is not in yet.

Mr. Adamson: It was reported at some length. It has been one of the outstanding botanical discoveries of the century. It was reported in the New York Times comparatively recently. I wonder if it is possible to have a copy of the report, because it is of some considerable botanical importance.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): A few moments ago when we were dealing with another item, I was told that the department is using the 1948-49 expenditures in connection with the illustrations of the estimates. In the public accounts I find that the expenditures for 1948-49 for the national museum were only $144,000. Then the estimate for 1949-50 went up to $209,000 and this year it has gone up another 25 per cent to $250,000. I think the minister should give some explanation of that increase.

Mr. Winters: The museum is an organization that has been neglected for a long time. It had been behind in its field work and in its publication of various scientific activities and findings. I am told, and I have every reason to believe it is correct, that the amount voted this year is certainly not too much for the sort of museum we should have as a national museum of Canada. The fact is not that this is too much; it is that the other amount to which my hon. friend referred was far too little.

[Mr. Winters.]

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I agree with that view. But you have not the place to put the exhibits. You will have to get another place. That building down there is not sufficient.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Parliament sat there once.

Mr. Herridge: My view would be that there are not sufficient funds available to do the work that a national museum in Canada should be doing.

Mr. Winters: That is what I said.

Mr. Herridge: I hope that this committee will support the granting of more funds for this purpose in the future. I am of the opinion that our national museum has a shoddy appearance inside. Are there any proposals or plans for improving the interior of the present building or for extending the national museum?

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Where is it?

Mr. Herridge: I think that is most necessary.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Do you know where it is?

Mr. Herridge: Yes. I have been there several times.

Mr. Winters: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that matter is receiving active consideration; and we hope some improvements will be made in the near future.

Mr. Adamson: Actually, there is more material stored and out of sight in the museum than there is on view.

Item agreed to.

371. Lands division—administration of dominion, ordnance and admiralty, and public lands; seed grain collections, $282,200.

Mr. McLure: What does the seed grain collection have to do with this ordnance and admiralty, and public lands administration?

Mr. Winters: These are as a result of advances made years ago in western Canada when the lands were still administered by the federal government and the responsibility for collections still remains with this department.

Mr. Fulton: An increase is shown here in total salaries of $32,000, and only one more person is shown in the breakdown at page 251. I understand that there have been increases in salaries, but this is a good deal more than 10 per cent. One approves of the increases that have been made in the civil
