ON TO THE SUEZ THE GERMAN CRY

Third Great Offensive of the Hun

BLOW AIMED AT BRITAIN

Most Desperate Military Adventure Ever Undertaken—American Critics Believe It a Bluff

In the opinion of Frank H. Simonds, the most prominent of American commentators on the war, the campaign in Serbia represents Germany's third great offensive. She struck at France first and failed to reach Paris, according to her schedule. Then she turned on Russia, and occupies much Russian territory although the Russian armies have escaped from her embrace, and are now ready to assume the offensive. Her campaign through Serbia is, in the judgment of this expert, her blow at Britain. From the beginning of the war Germany has recognized the fact that her great enemy is the British Empire. Lissauer's "Hymn of Hate" proved this, and the sale of "Gott Strafe England" badges is cumulative evidence. Her first blow, after her ships had been chased into the Kiel Canal, was by means of the submarine. This peril had been abated. The Zeppelin menace, which was expected to produce a demand for peace from the English civil population, was a failure, and resulted only in more recruits flocking to the colors. The campaign of "rightfulness," culminating in the sinking of the Lusitania, merely kindled wrath against her. All these plans have failed.
