

The City at Kamloops

Kamloops, British Columbia

A Live and Progressive City. The Business Centre of a District Rich in Natural Resources.

KAMLOOPS, situated as it is at the junction of two large rivers which drain an immense territory rich in undeveloped resources, is by nature destined to become the most important city in the interior of the Pacific Province. The country drained by the North Thompson River and its tributaries stretches from the height of land lying nearly three hundred miles to the north, while the South Thompson River drains the great Shuswap system of lakes lying to the east. The potentialities of these two districts are as yet hardly realized by even the most sanguine believer in the future awaiting

Kamloops and surrounding district. Navigable for light draft steamers for over a hundred miles, the North Thompson is an outlet to a valley the agricultural resources of which are unbounded, the mineral resources almost undreamed of and the timber resources practically unlimited. Of the valley drained through the Shuswap lakes and the South Thompson River, the same may be said and to the other resources may be added those which make for successful fruit culture. Not only with respect to its water transportation facilities is Kamloops advantageously situated. The well constructed highways leading in all directions, north, south, east and west, make the city the commercial centre of a district of untold possibilities, both agricultural and industrial, and the situation of the city on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway gives ample connection with the world. Kamloops is the geographical, commercial and administrative centre of a district comprising sixteen thousand miles of the richest section in the Province of British Columbia—the very hub of a land of fertile valleys
