THE INVITATION ACCEPTED

The following lines were inspired by an invitation to attend the Old Boys' Reunion, and is written from the Pacific Slope to the Old Girls at home:

How time have changed, my dear ones!
Of course, we couldn't choose—
We stayed to care for babies,
And father brought the news.

The boys have grown to manhood,
The girls are tall and fair,
And there's no reasonable excuse
For our not being there.

We'd like to take them with us,
For we can point with pride
To our own baker's dozen—
Here's no "race suicide."

And now that we're invited
I guess we'll not refuse,
We'll go along with father
And help the crowd enthuse.

How loyal of the old boys
To invite the girls once more
To laugh and chat and gossip
As in the days of yore!

Oh, yes, we all are going,
They've promised to amuse,
We'll be chatting by the dozens
And then again by twos.

And if, by any accident,
It should be the old beaux,
Will the lathers be objecting?
Now, what do you suppose?

And when the visit's over,
And all our money's spent,
We know we'll say, with candor,
We are so glad we went.

For we'll have priceless memories
For the golden years ahead,
And there'll be more reunions
When you and we are dead.

For sure, we all are going,
You'll not have long to wait—
Just lay aside your knitting
And meet us at the gate.
