Sink Not.

Sink not! sink not beneath the score That is upon you cast! temember you to cares were born— These will not always last, Up with the sun, and work away—
The night will come about,
And if you train yourself to-day
You'll put your foes to rout.

O keep a faithful, willing heart,

O keep a faithful, willing heart, And burdens bravely bear; In life this is the greatest art, To lessen every care.

To lessen every care.

See some of the situation is the load through the social will be some of the situation is that nobody appears to care muchif it is. The value of refined social intercourse is greatly under estimated in all places where its working are limited. In fact where civilization approaches nearest to the high-water maybe are more of the siluation by the common displayed and most completely organized.

It should be, next to the care of his eligion and his family, the daty of every resident in every country town to see to it that his share of the social work of the place is promptly and throughly done. It is because of their effect upon the social attrophysical and pleasant stimulous to the mind: but they are useful chiefly because they awaken an interest among the people in each other, which, if everybody has come up covinilly to the common duty, makes and interest among the people in each other, which, if everybody has come uportically to the common duty, makes and and and apleasant stimulous to the mind: but they are useful chiefly because they awaken an interest among the people in each other, which, if everybody has come uportically to the common duty, makes and and and apleasant stimulous to the mind: but they are useful chiefly because they awaken and and the work, which, if everybody has come uportically to the common duty, makes and and and any corriging the winter moths and as species of influence as if by magic.

Have you made any effort to establish church sociables in your neighborhood this winter? Oh—you've "heard that Deacon Wilder was asking somebody or other if it wouldn't be a good plan to have some." But why is it Deacon Wilder's business any more than yours? You will—or ought to—get just as much enjoyment and just as much benefit out of those sociables as Deacon Wilder, or anyone else.
