One of the methods of discovery is to sort out all the wrappers which contain the address of the sender. Each wrapper or part of an address, or anything to identify the package, is enclosed with a note to the sender, asking a description of the article it covers, to which it was attached, in order that the rightful owner may get the property.
In this way many valuable things are restored.

At one time the carelessness of great thieves of foreign journals was so great that a large part of the delivery was lost from the inquiry window. Last year more than seven thousand wrappers were identified in this way, and about five thousand packages restored to their owners. In many cases, however, research proved fruitless, and for one cause and another, about five thousand packages went to the Dead Letter Office.

Every day many persons try to send through the mails things which are not mailable, such as hair oil, ointments, and other liquids, explosives, grease, dead animals, snakes, vegetables, candy substances with hair, color, edge tools, unprotected glass, wedding cake, etc.
These things go straight to the Dead Letter Office unless called for soon.
The owners of packages of value are promptly notified that they had better take their things away.

In one day the following named articles were received among the unaddressed packages: Wall paper, watch cases, a flat piece of wood, wheels, a box of ultramarine blue, dildos, a lady's shoe upper, type, thread, a pipe,
