CHINESE SOLDIERS.

Novel Way in Which They Receive Their Pay.

The Chinese soldier receives his pay once a month only and Chinese months, it must be remembered, are much larger than those we are accustomed to reckon by. On the eve of the pay day the sergeant-major, goes and receives the amount of money requisite to pay his company from his next superior officer.

This is not paid to him in jingling coins, but in pure silver, which, however, has been broken into somewhat irregular pieces. The whole of the night preceding pay day is occupied in weighing out for each man the required quantity of silver, and this occupation, as may be imagined, is a very tedious one, and only successfully accomplished by infinite care, for here a piece the size of a pin's head must be clipped off, and there a piece of larger dimensions has to be added to make up weight, and any deviation one way or the other means the loss of perhaps a day's pay or more to some poor defender of the Celestial empire.

When the process of meeting out is accomplished the silver is carefully wrapped in paper, upon which is written the name of the intended recipient. On the following afternoon the company is mustered, and the sergeant-major divides the money, commencing with the first man in the company and going on to the last. When this division is concluded the question is asked in stentorian tones: "Has any one else a claim?" and the customary "No" having been promptly given, the men are then dismissed.

Each one now repairs to the nearest tradesman's shop, where he exchanges his silver. For one tael he receives 1,000 small coins called cash, perforated in the center so as to allow of being strung on a string, and having received the proper amount, turns homeward with a cheerful air, but nearly sinking beneath his burden.

The private receives three and one-half taels, equal to about thirty dollars worth monthly, out of which he has to provide himself with food and clothing. But he lives on rice, and his other cost but a trifling amount.
