Another Sad Drowning later accidentally learned what had occurred, and dazed and heartbroken

Hardly had the public gleaned the details attending the death of the man Carey, whose body was found at 4.30 p.m. that a boy had been drowned at Kenny's Pond while swimming there. The second accident following so closely on the first created consternation, and when it became known that the victim was Charlie Devine, the little son of Mr. P. K. Devine of the Telegram reportorial staff, expressions of sympathy were heard on all sides for the stricken parents and family. The particulars of the case make a sad story. Charlie, who was a fine little chap of 15, left his home in Georgetown after partaking of dinner met a companion, Thos. Kean, son of Mr. John Kean. Both wended their way to Kenny's Pond for a plunge in the water as the afternoon was so fine and warm. Both lads were excellent swimmers and on reaching the pond divested themselves of their clothing on the north bank and plunging in started to swim across the sheet of water. Thoroughly enjoving the sensation as they went across, both lads made good time to the south bank. On arrival here the boy Kean asked Charlie if he would go ashore and take a rest before returning. To this Charlie replied that instantly he again disappeared and did not again rise until his dead body was brought ashore less than an hour afterwards. The lad Kean says that when Charlie reappeared he made an effort to grasp him but failed. He received a fright which he will not forget for a lifetime, and the wonder is that he did not lose control of himself and share the fate of his youthful friend. The lad Kean swam quickly ashore and gave the alarm to two boys, Tibble and McGrath, who were reclining on the grass. These lads ran to the residence of Judge Prowse nearby and immediately Dr

McPherson was called and the police and Const. Jas. Tobin with Dr. Mac-

To this Charlie replied that George came along, and before those it would be to cool to stand there on the handcar could jump they were with the wind blowing, and he immediately struck out on the return journey across the pond, his companion following about 5 or 6 yards behind. The boys, confident of their ability as swimmers, made good progress until they got to the centre of the nond, when without a cry or any water and it was difficult to reach the remains, which lay fully 15 feet under the surface. Const. Tobin now dived repeatedly but found the same difficulty as the doctor, and though he too reached the body he could not get it off bottom as the suction of the mud prevented this. July 19.—One of events of ancient origin of which even Londoners know little has just pletely over, and it caught the body as it dragged the bottom and it was brought to the surface and placed in the boat. Dr. Macpherson then set to work, and as the boat was pulled shorewards worked on the body hoping that a spark of life might remain and that resuscitation might follow his efforts. On the body being brought to the kitchen of the Prowse residence and rolled in blankets, the physician, ably helped by Byrne and Tobin, continued his efforts for nearly an hour, but all to no purpose—the vital spark had quit its earthly tenement. Mr. John Carew, cabman, was then called and brought the body home, where almost affecting scene took place. Mr. Devine learned of the sad affair just the force 6 o'clock at the railway depot, and the news came to him as a terribe shock. Having been invited to the Ropewalk outing he had entered one of the cars of the train when a messenger from the General Passenger Agent's office told him to go to the rollow from the Telegram Office not to leave in the body nor new reign. occurred, and dazed and neartbroken he drove hurriedly home to his grief-stricken wife and children. The sud-denness of the accident intensified the sadness attaching to it. What the cause of the drowning of the lad was can only be conjectured. It might have been the result of cramps or sudden exhaustion, due to such a long swim for one so young. The passing of their little boy in such a tragic man-ner is a terrible blow to Mr. and Mrs. Devine, to whom the Telegram tends its sincerest sympathy.

An Unprecedented Occurrence.

At Exploits this season the caplin did not once put in an appearance, an occurrence without a precedent in the history of the place. As a result the people were without this as a fertilizer, their dogs and pigs were without it as a food, and the people will miss them also as they were dried and barreled and consumed as food during

New York, July 20.-Finger marks of a young man giving the name of New York, July 20.—Finger marks found on a rifled safe in Liege, Belgium, last July; finger marks found on a photographic print sent from Liege to the Central Office here, and finger marks freshly imprinted on a proof pulled by Central Office detectives yesterday, led to the detention of a young man giving the name of Louis Mendelhaum, charged with the robbery. On the morning of January 7 last the brothers Francois and Emile Marck found that the vault of their bank in Liege had been opened by an electric-driven drill and robbed of $80,000 in jewellery, bonds and the prints of the man they believed guilty.
