Distinction Without a Difference

By RUTH CAMERON.

Did you ever notice how often people from different sections of the country have different "kinds" or different phrases for the same thing? Theoretically it is the same English language which is spoken in England and all over the United States and Canada. But actually the same words have a different meaning, and the same facts are expressed in a different way in different places.

For instance, an Englishman was commenting on the weather to an American one day. "When I was in North," he said, "we had 42 degrees of frost." Eventually the American discovered that he meant that it was 42 degrees below freezing point. Or, as he himself would have put it, 19 degrees below zero. And that, he subsequently discovered, is the fashion in which Englishmen always read the thermometer, only I believe they call it the glass.

Again, a little dark room in which one hangs one's clothes has always been a closet to me. But since I have mingled with people from other sections of the country I find that it is a clothes press to many of them.

Ordinary bread baked in biscuit form is biscuit to a Northerner. To the Southerner that word means baking powder biscuit only. While the Northern biscuit he calls rolls.

To call another example from the culinary field, what I have always called doughnuts I find that people from other parts of the country usually know under the name crullers.

The outside hanging in a window is called by some people a curtain. Although I have always been of this class, I must admit it is ambiguous since the thin draperies are also known as curtains, and one must say lace curtain in order to make the distinction plain. "Shade" is the word used by others, and still others say "draw the blind." The last seems as ambiguous as the first to me since it can be confused with the blind on the outside of the house. However, on making this complaint to a member of the "blind" cult, I was informed that there was no ambiguity, since the protection on the outside of the window which I call a blind, he calls a shutter.

If you want to make an elevator sound distinguished you should call it a lift. I think that is more a distinction of class than of section. For the ordinary business man who uses it every day it is an elevator; to the gentleman of leisure who only comes down town occasionally it is a lift.

Jack and nabe on the other hand seem to be an English and American distinction.

These are a few of the little differences I have noted down from time to time. Doubtless you can add others quite as interesting which have attracted your notice.

Why Men Learn to Fly!AN AVIATION INSTRUCTOR TALKS ABOUT HIS PUPILS.

Men learn to fly nowadays for all sorts of extraordinary reasons, remarked a well-known aviation instructor to Mr. P. Doubleday one day recently.

For instance, one of my pupils spent six months perfecting himself in this art so as to be able to take up a certain young lady as a passenger, and propose to her while in the air.

She accepted his proposal, but only on condition that he promised never to fly again. To this he had no force to agree, so that his novel method of popping the question cost him in hard cash about $200.

Mr. T. Sopwith wanted to be the first man to fly to the King. He got his "ticket"—aviators never call it a "certificate"—in November, 1910, and flew from Brooklands to Windsor Castle on February 1st, 1911, where King George received him in the kindest manner possible, although the visit was quite unexpected.

Mr. C. Chapman, pilotman, an enthusiastic sportsman, learnt to fly because it was his ambition, to be the first man to attend the Waterloo Cup meeting by aeroplane. Dider Masson the American airman, wanted his name to go down to posterity as the first aerial postman.

Quite recently the rage amongst aviators has lain in the direction of fancy flights, or "stunt flying," as we call it. But this sort of thing costs money, for not only are special machines required, but the course of instruction runs into anything between 150 to 300 pounds, as against the usual 75 pounds for ordinary tuition.

Famous "Pint of Cough Syrup" Recipe

No Better Remedy at Any Price. Fully Guaranteed.

Make a plain syrup by mixing two eggs of granulated sugar and one cup of warm water and stir for two minutes. Put 2½ ounces of pure Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16-ounce bottle, and fill it up with the Sugar Syrup. This gives you a handy supply of the best cough syrup at a saving of 42. It never spoils. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

The effectiveness of this simple remedy is surprising. It seems to take hold instantly, and will usually stop the most obstinate cough in 24 hours. It tones up the lungs, soothes the throat, and is just as effective in a cold, and has a pleasant taste. Also excellent for bronchitis, throat trouble, sore throat and asthma, and an unequalled remedy for whooping cough and croup.

This recipe for making cough remedy with Pinex and Sugar Syrup (or strained honey) is a prime favorite in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada. The plan has been imitated, though never successfully. If you try it, use only genuine Pinex, which is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in pineoil and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this recipe.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex, or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

There are a few changes in blouses, but almost without exception the loose kimono style prevails.

Babies' hats are smaller in shape, nestling close to winsome curls, and they may flare slightly at the sides.

The favourite trimmings for spring hats are flowers, fruits, striped quills, ribbon fantasias, wings, small 3-trich tips and jet.

In millinery is found small shapes that are turned and twisted away from the head; also extremely high turbans.

There are some draped styles making their appearance that emphasize the vogue for polonaise and overskirt fashions.

Fashion has reduced the bodice of evening gowns until nothing remains but narrow strips of lace extending over the shoulders.

Shallow collars of crepe de chine with picot edges will be worn with the frocks of taffeta, crepe de chine and charmeuse.

Some of the new blouses have yokes that extend across the back and shoulders, sometimes forming half of the upper sleeve.

The new frocks of wash materials are cut with low neck lines that require a gullipe, or they follow the lines of the jumper.

The plique-shaped hat is attracting much attention at present. It is almost flat on top and elevated by a bandeau at the side back.

The skirt with the winding flounce craperies will be very much worn. These skirts have a ruffle winding around the figure in serpentine fashion.

Afternoon wraps are frequently of taffeta, quilled and ruffled with elaborate neck ruffs or hood collars that show to advantage a bit of bright lining.

This year there is no depending on the waist line. It has lost its stability; it goes up and down, and is entirely the mercy of the type of gown worn.

The note of contrast is still sounded where street costumes are concerned; the smartest models have skirts of checked material and jackets of plain.

There is no prettier neckwear than the white lace inserted or embroidered, or perfectly plain hemstitched affairs made of white lawns, mulls and organdies.

Many of the thin blouses have very full sleeves attached to the bishop-shaped, 10 inch lace inserted or embroidered cuffs. The latter are edged with wide fluted frills.

Children who are well dressed no longer appear in elaborate lace and ribbon trimmed frocks. Modern mothers display good taste in selecting dresses of charming simplicity.

Charming effects are being obtained with Roman-striped materials. Many handsome afternoon frocks are developed in taffeta or satin, with tunics and half bodices of the striped silk.
