OPEN EVERY NIGHT UNTIL 9.30. Ethie's Report.

(Western Star.) The s.s. Ethie arrived from the Straits of Belle Isle on Saturday evening. A hundred passengers came by her. The ship brought a full load of freight including a large quantity of herring which were landed here. Capt. English informed the Western Star that bait was very scarce along the Newfoundland side of the Straits, and cod plentiful. Not much codfish going at Battle Harbor when the Ethie was there. At Henley Harbor, cod and herring continue plentiful, but salt is scarce. There were nunerous herring at Forteau when the ship went north, but on Sept. 30 there were not many going. Dogfish was numerous at Port au Choix. There is also a good sign of cod at that place, but bait is scarce. The ship experi-

St. Quentin.

The city of St. Quentin, figuring so rominently in the war needs nowalays, before the war contained a population of 55,600 people. It is located on a height above the River Somme, 87 miles northeast of Paris. It is an ancient bastion of France and has figured in other wars as a strategic centre. It has been prominent in history because of its position on the frontiers between France and the Low

In 1557 the army of Henri II. of France was destroyed in a sanguinary battle by the soldiers of Philip II. of Spain. The soldiers of Philip were assisted by a body of English auxiliaries. The town of itself was taken and sacked by the Spaniards. St. Quentin was well built and had among its edifices a beautiful Gothic church (formerly a cathedral) of the early part of the thirteenth century, a Gothic town house with a facade resting on a colonnade of seven pointed arches, and forming a splendid specimen of the flamboyant architecture of the fifteenth century.

Like the city of Lille, Turcoing, Roubaix and other northern sections of France, St. Quentin was a centre of cotton and woollen manufacturing. covered with bleaching fields. The town somewhat resembled an American textile manufacturing city. In the present war it has change hands several times and probably now is largely in ruins. St. Quentin figured in the war 1870 between France and Prussia. In January, 1871, the French forces were friven out of the town by the Germans after a bitter struggle in which many were slain on both sides. The town is less than thirty miles from the Hard Salted Salmon.

A fair demand for hard salted salmon in the local trade is reported this week, but there has been little change in the situation as regards to future supplies from the Pacific Coast or from Newfoundland. On the contrary, buyers here seem to be willing to wait for cooler weather before making purchases for direct shipment from the coast. Unquestionably holders of snot stocks are at an advantage at this time, for the demand is beginning
