An Aged Offender Convicted.

Two inmates of the Old Men's Home appeared in court this morning—one of them behind the bars. Wm. Atkinson testified that yesterday his cap was hanging on a peg when Thomas Alexander came and knocked to off. He put the cap up again when the offense was repeated. The witness then shoved Alexander a little, whereupon the latter whaled him on the head and shoulder with his stick, drawing blood. Alexander said that Atkinson had kicked him on the leg, and seemed anxious to show the wound, but the court deemed it unnecessary. The stick which was brought in, looked like a formidable weapon. The Magistrate decided it as a case of common assuit, and fined the prisoner $10 or two months.

An Indignant Tenderer.

Mayor Taylor to-day received a letter from M. D. Barr, district manager of the Edison Electric Company, complaining in very strong terms of the decision of the City Council on the electric light question. He is particularly severe on what he calls the unfairness of the aldermen in first calling for tenders, to be according to specifications, and then permitting these to be altered. He says the Edison Company would have never tendered or opened negotiations if it had supposed it was not to be a "fair deal." The manner in which the tenders have been disposed of, Mr. Barr asserts, will have "an effect hereafter in keeping reputeble companies from tendering, not only for electric light plants, but for other works which the Council may require to enter upon."

Strauss' Farewell Tour.

Herr Eduard Strauss, imperial and royal court ball music director of Austria, is conducting the final and farewell tour of his properties of the strain of the strain and farewell tour of his properties of the strain and farewell tour of his properties of the strain and farewell tour of his properties of the strain and farewell tour of his properties of the strain and st court ball music director of Austria, is conducting the final and farewell tour of his famous orchestra in America, which will end Dec. 5 in New York. The history of music affords no parallel to the spontaneity and the heartiness of encomiums which the people and press of this country accorded to this remarkable organization during its preliminary tour begun in Boston in May. For nearly three generations this organization has been trained by the Strausses—father and sons—and for 25 years it has been under the direction of the present leader—the younger son, Eduard—who was born and brought up in the hearing, practice and direction of the orchestra, and in the composition of a vast amount of the music of the family. That with such traditions and opportunities, the younger has become a consummate interpreter of the charming music of this wonderful quartet of composers, is not to be wondered at, and that the press of this country and distinguished individual judges have placed him upon the plunacle of accomplishment in his particular sphere, is the legitimate sequence of his unequaled opportunities in this direction. That the ovation of the spring will be followed by a similar experience during this, the final tour of the orchestra in America, is without a doubt.

The Toronto World says: "Strauss

the final tour of the orchestra in America, is without a doubt.

The Toronto World says: "Strauss seizes his violin, plays a few bars of one of his delighful waltzes, and then, hanging the instrument down in one hand, he takes up the bow as a partner and his body goes off into a peculiar stitilation, the women in the audience wish they were the bow, the music grows more ravishing, and some everybody before the wizard imagines they are moving through the mazes of an enchanted waltz. But whether it is the players or the people that he attacks you instinctively keep your eye on the baton or the bow with its magnetizing power."

Miss Margaret Mather is the ideal Juliet of the American stage. Young, beautiful and talented, she stands without a rival as Shakespeare's lovelorn heroine, and is now the only actress this side of the Atlantic who can attract crowded houses. This is her last night, and a more charming bill than "Romeo and Juliet" could not be presented.

commissioner Essery this morning and found him smiling over the ADVERTISER's account of last night's meeting of the Council,

"I see some of the aldermen are charging the Water Commissioners with taking advantage of the statute, "said the scribe."

"Well, such is not the case. The commissioners are simply going to do their duty by the citizens. If the Council made a mistake, as they acknowledge, in framing the statute, are we to father it? The Water Commissioners had nothing to do with that. We are directed to do certain works, to keep faith with South London, and if it requires more than $70,000, why we must apply for more, and if not handed over we will take steps to compel the Council to do so. They now say that they have made an error and should have made two sections in the same statute—one to raise $70,000 for the electric light plant. And they didn't, although there were deputations from London South and the city; but are we responsible for that? The Council passed a bylaw to give us $130,000, and then actually wanted us to pass another handing over to them $60,000 before their grant was given. But we refused because that would the charging us with a debt which we never incurred. What kind of book-keeping would the citizens think that to be? No; we are going to carry on our work conscientiously. Again, the Council claim that the commissioners are in debt to them $60,000 incurred during the past several years. Now, supposing the residents of a street make application for water, we are compelled to lay down pipe on that street. It costs us a certain amount to do that, but when finished every inch of that pipe and all the work immediately becomes the property of the city. Then they go and levy a tax on the whole of the people to pay for the exponditure, charging the debt at the same time at our doors. They want us to estimate the value on the lands to be purchased at Springbank; but do you suppose for a moment that we are going to put our figures in public before the arbitration has decided on them? They wo

Local Business Change.

Among the business changes of the past few days was one which affected London's leading gentlemen's furnishing and clothing emporium, doing business under the name and style of "Burns & Bapty." Mr. H. Bapty by the recent change retires from the firm, and new blood in the person of Mr. R. Burns is introduced, the style of the firm being "Burns & Burns." The new company enters upon its career with the determination to celipse all previous attainments, and to make the large establishment, No. 154 Dundas street, more sought after than ever before. The impression made by a scrutiny of their two show windows cannot but be confirmed with an examination of their premises. On one side of their store is a complete line of haberdasher's good, including shirts, underwear, hosiery, gloves, and, in short, everything from the staple wares to the novelties countenanced by the latest whims of fashion. The cloth and tweed department occupies the opposite side of the store, while the rear is devoted to a large and varied assortment of readymade clothing for which the firm has be come so justly noted. The upper floors are entirely devoted to the manufacture of fine custom and stock clothing. Few establishments can boast of so efficient a staff of workers as that which finds employment here. Four competent cutters of varied experience are kept busily engaged alternately on children's and men's clothing.
