Because he had a good line.

Three of the foregoing reasons are valid and sufficent; three are not worth much consideration. The shoe manufacturer who is moved to insert an advertisement simply because his neighbor advertises is prone to direct a discontinuance when he receives its first advertising bill.

The man who expects to get an immediate and profitable return from his advertisement gets disappointed ninety-nine times in a hundred. If advertising yielded prompt and rich profits it would discourt silver mining at Creede.

A Trolley Motorman Still Hears the Cry of the Child His Car Killed.

New York, Nov. 14.—James McBride, the Myrtle avenue motorman whose trolley car erushed the life out of 9.year-old Gussie Sommera on Sept. 28, has been released by Justice Goetting in Brooklyn. McBride's case is a peculiarly sad one. He resigned his position and says that the baby's screams are still ringing in his cars. He was robust and ruddy-faced at the time of the accident. He is now pallid and servous looking. The evidence showed that the motorman was blameless in the matter. When the little girl passed out from behind the truck the ear was close upon her, and nothing short of a miracle could have averted the accident.

"I will never forget that scream," said he; "it is ringing in my ears yet. It has been ringing in them ever since the accident. I have had to give up my business. My nervee are all untrung, and if there is any trouble on a car I grow faint." Justice Goetting released McBride after hearing his sad story.
