SARDINE FISHING.

The Process From the Time of the Cate to the Canning and Cooking. The sardine fishing along the coast of Brittany is now in full swing. 'Towards the end of April the fishermen begin to watch for the bubbling of the sar-dines on the surface of the sea. For they know that vast shoals of the little fish are on their way from the coast of Africa up through the Bay of Biscay to the north, and that they must be caught, if at all, as they pass. When any one sees the water agitated word spreads rapidly, and the boats put out from the shore and race to the shoal. When the net is extended the water is "baited" by throwing balls of "roque" into it. As the bait dissolves and sinks the sardines rise and remain long after to nibble it, and their doom is scaled. For this reason "roque" is a most important part of the sardine fisherman's outfit. It is made of the eggs of mackerel and codfish mixed with clay, and is rather expensive, costing from twenty-five shillings to seventy shillings a barrel. Within the curing factories or canneries everything is bustle and confusion, for there must not be a All night long the work is carried on by the light of blazing oil wicks. The sardines are on benches or tables, where salt is dusted over them. Then the women go along and snip off the neads with great scissors. The little flat boxes so well-known to commerce. are taken one by one and filled from the glisening pile of fish, after which pure olive oil from the Province of Bari, in Italy, is poured over them and the tops soldered on. In the meantime a great cauldron of hot water has been raised to the boiling point ready for the real operation of cooking the fish. The sealed boxes are thrown into it and sealed boxes are thrown into it and left for two or three hours. If any oil appears on the top of the water the master workman knows that some can has not been properly soldered and the loss is charged up to the man who did the work. The colonists of New Zealand are a holiday-making people. There is almost an average of one recognized holiday to a month, and it is a common practice for all working people to take two or more days at Christmas, the New Year and Easter, so as to make an C. R. unbroken play time of three or four RR My, including Sundays. Then the great mass of the people give them-selves up to amusement. Horse races, athletic sports, boat races and excurspot, and are attended by large and of all holiday amusements, however, is the picnic. The several trades, sects and societies have picnics of their own, to which the public are cordially welto which the public are cordially wel-comed on the payment of a small sum toward the expenses of the entertaintoward the expenses of the entertainment. It is amusing to the railway traveler to not as he passes through some pretty countryside, not one or two, but perhaps fifty, different picnics in full swing, each numbering scores or hundreds of guests. It has been said, with much more truth than is usually to be found in epigrams of this kind, that "in New Zealand people are like cattle. You need only to turn a number of them into a pasture and leave them alone and the will be perfectly happy." On a warm and tempting New Year's day an enterprising burglar might walk through a New Zealand city and help himself, Zealand city and help himself, undisturbed, to the contents of most of the houses. Dwellings and streets are alike deserted, and the casual sojourner who does not understand the ways of the place seeks in vain for somebody to speak to. By 6 or 7 o'clock in the evening the streets are lively with returning crowds.
