up, so that the shilling is firmly slung at one end of the thread. Put on a solid table a glass tumbler, with a fairly wide mouth. Rest your elbow on the table in a firm and easy position so as to avoid any shakiness in your hand, hold the other end of the thread between your first finger and the "ball" of the thumb (i.e., the fleshy top joint of the thumb), so that the thumb nail is underneath, and a few inches above the middle of the mouth of the glass.

Now, if you keep your hand quite steady, the movement of the coin (when it is hanging inside the tumbler) will become less and less until the shilling is motionless. Then, in half a minute or so, a very slight and regular vibration with commence, the coin oscillating from side to side like a pendulum, and gradually increasing the length of movement until it generally strikes the side of the glass. This strike goes on in the most regular and automatic way, first on one side of the glass and then on the other, until, say, eight strokes have been struck; the vibrations of the coin then diminish in length, until the suspended shilling again becomes motionless and hangs in the middle of the tumbler. You look at your watch and find that 8 o'clock is the nearest hour.

I have tried this over and over again, deliberately setting about the experiment without bias or any intention of influencing the swing of the coin, and also being ignorant of the time, and when my hand has been steady the right time has invariably been struck.

There is something very curious about this phenomenon. Whether the thread is influenced by the pulse in the "ball" of the thumb, or whether there is some unconscious transference of "intention" from the brain to the thread, I do not know; but in any case the matter is sufficiently interesting to be worthy of a critical test by persons who will carefully and without bias carry out this singular experiment of timing the time.
