

Of these 47 students:

28 went to foreign universities for further graduate work.

12 did not take further graduate work in geology.

7 did further graduate work at McGill, of whom three are at present at McGill.

Of the 28 students who went to foreign universities:

22 received Fellowships, Scholarships, or Assistantships.

4 were unassisted.

2 doubtful.

Only about one graduate student in ten carries on his work without some financial assistance from the university he attends. At present (1930-31) there are nine graduate students in Geology at McGill and only four of them receive any financial assistance - two have teaching fellowships and two have Research Council Bursaries.
