Adams, a township in Berkshire county, Massachusetts, containing 1688 inhabitants, is 142 miles N W of Boston. In the northern part of this town, is a great natural curiosity. A pretty mill stream, called Hudson's Brook, which rises in Vermont, and falls into the north branch of Hoosuck river, has, for 30 or 40 rods, formed a very deep channel, in some places 60 feet deep, through a quarry of white marble. Over this channel, where deepest, some of the rocks remain, and form a natural bridge. From the top of this bridge to the water, is 62 feet; its length is about 12 or 15, and its breadth about 10. Partly under this bridge, and about 10 or 12 feet below it, is another, which is wider, but not so long; for, at the east end they form one body of rock, 12 or 14 feet thick, and under this the water flows. The rocks here are mostly white, and in other places clouded, like the coarse marble common at Laneshorough, and in other towns in Berkshire county.

Agamenticus, a mountain of considerable elevation in the district of Maine, distant about 6 miles from Bald Head, and 8 from York harbour. Lat. 43 16 N; and 70 39 W lon. from Greenwich. It is a noted landmark for seamen, and is a good directory for the entry of Piscataqua harbour, as it lies very nearly in the same meridian with it, and with Pigeon Hill, on Cape Ann. The mountain is covered with wood and shrubs, and affords pasture up to its summit, where there is an enchanting prospect. The cultivated parts of the country, especially on the S and S W appear as a beautiful garden, interdicted by the majestic river
