Uncle Wiggily and the School Books

BY HOWARD R. GARIS.
Copyright, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

HARK! What is that noise?" suddenly asked Uncle Wiggily Long-ears, the bunny rabbit, as he sat in his hollow stump bungalow one morning, eating his breakfast of orange oatmeal.

"What noise?" asked Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy, the muskrat lady housekeeper. "All I hear is a bell ringing."

"That's the noise I mean," said Uncle Wiggily. "Why is the bell ringing? Is there a fire?"

Nurse Jane Hetened. Then she laughed.

"Oh, that's just the school bell," she said. "The lady mouse teacher, in the hollow stump school, wants the animal children to come back to their lessons after the long summer vacation."

"Oh, ho! So it is the school bell!" exclaimed Uncle Wiggily. "Well, I must hurry thru with my breakfast and go out and see my friends, the animal children, going to school. Some of them I have not seen for a long while."

Uncle Wiggily finished eating his breakfast. Then with his tall, silk hat, and his red, white and blue striped rheumatism crutch, away he hopped, hoping to meet some of the animal children.

Uncle Wiggily began to hop toward the hollow stump school, where the lady mouse heard lessons, and the bunny rabbit gentleman was about half way there when, all of a sudden, just as he turned around the corner by an old stump, there he saw Lulu and Alice Wibblewobble, the two duck girls.

"Good morning, girls," spoke Uncle Wiggily most politely.

"Good morning!" quacked Lulu and Alice.

"Why are you standing here?" Uncle Wiggily wanted to know. "Why don't you go on to school? Don't you know that the bell has rung?"

"Oh, yes, Uncle Wiggily," said Lulu.
"We heard the bell, but we weren't going to school."

"Why not?" Uncle Wiggily wanted to know. "It can't be because you don't know your lessons. For this is the first day of school, and you will not have to recite any lessons until tomorrow."

"Oh, it isn't that," quacked Alice.
"The reason we are afraid to go on is because just ahead of us on the path, is the bad old Pipsesewah. He's asleep now, but if we go too near he'll wake up and catch us."

"Yes," agreed Uncle Wiggily. "I believe he would."

"And we can't go around any other path without taking a very long one," said Lulu. "O, what shall we do?"
and she stood there with her school books under one wing. Alice had her books under her wing, also.

"I'll take a look at the Pips," said

Uncle Wiggily, softly, and he did.
Surely enough, there was the bad chap asleep under a tree, right across the woodland path which the animal children had to take to get to school.

"I wonder how I can help you get past him?" said Uncle Wiggily to Lulu and Alice.

Just then along came Susie Little-tail, the rabbit girl, and with her was her brother Sammie.

"What's the matter?" asked Sammie.
"Why don't you go on to school, Lulu and Alice? You'll be late."

"We're afraid to," quacked Alice, while Susie changed her school books from one paw to the other.

"The old Pipsesewah is there!" whispered Sammie.

And then, all at once, along came Jackie and Peetie Bow Wow, the purple dog boys. They, too, had their school books, and when they were told what was the matter they stopped, and going up softly, looked at the Pipsesewah sleeping across the path.

"Oh, the Pipsesewah!" suddenly said Jackie. "I know how you can make the Pips go away!"

"Well, we have here quite a few school books," went on the puppy dog boy. "The books are a lot of hard arithmetic examples, like how many are ten lollipops and seven ice cream cones?"

"I know there are hard examples in your books," agreed Uncle Wiggily. "I know there are hard examples in your books."

"And there is a hard spelling lesson in my book," said Susie.

"What about it?" asked Uncle Wiggily.
"How will you read the hard
