Whitegar. The extracts were interesting for a flowery rhetoric which struggled mightily to illuminate the dull cirumlocutions of legal phraseology. Now he wife, thru her attorneys, has file1 an answer which also is removed from the commonplace. She denies each and all of the plaintiff's allegations with reall of the plaintiff's allegations with respect to money transactions, save as she admits that he gave her $400 to invest in some town lots as per a certain antenuptial agreement, "During the period of her married life, extending over about a year," declares the answer, "the said plaintiff, out of the magnanimity and greatness and generosity of his heart, lavished the sum of $10 upon her, and said sum is all the defendant ever received from him." But the defendant's answer is more interesting from its picture of the impetuous and tempetuous lover, and with respect to this part we quote from The Courier as follows:

"And for a fifth defence the defendant states that marriage between the nt states that marriage between the laintiff and this defendant was a very uick and tragic one; that the same as the result of love at first sight, and as the result of love at his sight, and ollowing a brief, meteoric courtship of ut a few short days; that as a lover plaintiff was a Romeo in his pro-estations and demands, and demanded and attempted to obtain from defendant a promise of marriage within 15 minutes from their first introduction and acquaintance; that he swore by all wers of heaven that life would be barren waste without this defendant his side, and that the minutes would rag with leaden wings and seem as ays—yes, even weeks and months—nless, he could have her as his wife. A Lancer's Reminiscences. Sergeant Lunnertey, one of the Bala-clava heroes who recently received from the King the medal for meritorious service, together with an annuity, has been telling the story of the famous charge telling the story of the famous charge of half a century ago.

He was in the 17th Lancers at the time. "We had not proceeded far," he says, "before the men in the left division of my squadron were nearly all mowed down, including a sergenat who had his head blown off, but afterwards rode about thirty yards before he fell from the saddle.

"Within a few yards of the Russian guns my horse had one of its fore legs blown off. I forced my way on foot, when I was attacked by Russian cavalry, thru whom I succeeded in cutting my way. No sooner, however, had I got clear of my foes than I was knocked down and ridden over by a number of riderless horses.

"Having regained my feet, I observed one of the 13th Light Dragoons under his horse, which had been killed, the rider (Trooper J. Malone) not-being able to free himself. I suceeded in dragging the horse from him, and set him at liberty. Later on I assisted Sergeant-Major Farrel, of the same regiment, to carry Captain Webb, who was badly wounded, out of danger. GOLD IN SHEEP'S HEAD.

Accumulated Metal Browsing on Australian Hills.

London, Aug. 27.—It is possible that the discovery of gold in the heads of sheep brought from the Antipodes and sold in Bethnal Green may be followed by the discovery of a rich deposit of the precious and processed to the characteristic of the congregation will have the preference over others. Applicants must not expect to receove more tickets than they actually require for members of their own families, and no more than three tickets can be issued to any one family.

Bethnal Green may be followed by the discovery of a rich deposit of the precious metal in the place where the sheep were fed. If the place of their origin were traced such a sequel would be extremely likely.

"Many of the numerous gold fields of Australia," writes a gold buyer, "were discovered by shepherds, who picked up gold on their runs. A very interesting subject has been tapped by accident in Bethnal Green, especially as an expert gold buyer, if shown the gold undisturbed in the sheeps' heads, might be able to trace the district from which it came."

A warning is, however, expressed by another correspondent familiar with the gold fields: "There are places both in Australia and New Zealand," writes "W.S.," "where the grass can be pulled up and gold washed from its roots. But let no one fhink that this need be a sign of an El Dorado. Gold, to remain so near the surface, must be in such small, scaly particles as to render its economic working."
