THE TRINITY LEDGE

Where, yesterday, the raving Trinity gave proof to watchers two full leagues away
At Cape St. Mary, of the tempest's sway,
Today, guarding her hoard, the greedy sea,
No longer ruffled under Boreal taunts,
Fondles the black-fangled ledge with edging tide,
Conceals its dangers as the waves subside,
And calls her monsters from remotest haunts.
For dreadful memories here their vigils keep!
And e'en that lonely sail now drifting by
The ledge inspires a tragic interest.
If to that awful grave with oars away
We go to mourn our lost, we there descry
Only a buoy upon the ocean's breast.

DEMAND PURE TEA.

In this age for purity in foods, all tea drinkers should shun dusty teas, so much in use in this province, as while they are unpleasant in use, they are certainly also unwholesome, and are used largely to reduce the cost, dust being fully of two-thirds less value than the pure clean whole leaf tea that the "Salada" Company use in their well-known packets.

Of course the best of teas will offer a little breakage in the packing, which in no wise detracts from their tea pot drawing qualities, but it is when dust enters largely into their make-up that the public should fight shy of them.

EIGHTY-FIVE IN PRE-VOCATIONAL SCHOOL IN CALGARY

First in Canada Has Been Given a Good Start—The Way The Idea is Worked Out

Calgary, Jan. 16.—The opening of the school year has seen the beginning of a new epoch in education in Calgary through the inauguration of the pre-vocational school system which has commenced work with an enrolment of eighty-five pupils—thirty-nine boys and forty-six girls. This is the first pre-vocational school to be opened in any Canadian city.

The opening of this school is largely an experiment but it is hoped that its results, principal among which will be the lengthening of the educational period for all children and the consequent turning out of better boys and girls and a reduction of the present large number of children who are turned loose in the world after completing their elementary education without a knowledge of any calling or trade.

Early in the autumn of 1913 a circular was sent to the parents of all children in Grades six and seven of the Calgary public schools inquiring, among other things, as to the child's likes and dislikes in the way of studies, any apparent tendencies towards callings or avocations and the parents' intentions as to the child's future.

Particular attention was also paid to the question of whether or not it was the parents' desire to have the child proceed to the high school or university. These circulars were analyzed when returned and it was found that a large proportion of the pupils would leave school at the end of the elementary period and go to work. It was also found that a large number of pupils expressed a desire to enter mechanical occupations, a rather large number indicating their desire to enter offices and many girls suggesting household arts. As in other cities, it was found that the actual number going forward to higher education was very small compared to the total.

Armed with these facts a special officer of the Calgary School Board detailed to make inquiries presented a scheme for a course of work which would provide a different form of education for those children who proposed to leave school at the earliest legal age. A school centrally located was chosen and a new wing was allotted for the experiment which has just begun. The scheme involved the arrangements whereby half of each day would be spent in academic work and the other half in some form of industrial activity.

For the girls the industrial activities take the form of cooking, sewing, laundry work and general housewifery; for the boys advanced types of manual training in woodwork, simple metal work and a print-shop are provided. A third side of the work is that leading to office occupation. To that end shorthand will be introduced and much of the work in arithmetic and other subjects will have a bias towards commercial and other pursuits. Drawing will be emphasized throughout the course, as it is a means of education which is more being recognized as having enormous value as a measure of training and development.

One important fact is kept in mind and that is that no bar shall be placed in the way of a child who may wish to proceed to a higher school. In point of fact, although the Calgary scheme has been designed largely for those who intend to leave school at the earliest possible age, yet it is expected to materially lengthen the school life of the children. It is anticipated that the more attractive nature of the work will keep them at school longer and so develop their capabilities by means of the industrial and manual side of the courses as to encourage them to go on into the higher schools.

Another interesting feature is that the Calgary school authorities are definitely committed to provide a large technical high school, offering broad and generous courses in technical and general education. The pre-vocational schools are eventually expected to prove large and valuable feeders for the technical high school.
