Dublin Stout on the Mount of Olives. It is with something like a feeling of horror that one reads that part of the way to the Mount of Olives is disfigured with advertisements of Dublin stout, and that bands play dance music on Sundays in the Garden of Gethsemane. Whose stout can this be? The advertisements must have been put up by some enterprising Mohammedan caterer, and the Sunday music is probably also a catchpenny attraction. But is it possible that any Christian visiting these sacred places could allow himself to patronize this purveyor of Dublin porter or this musical tout? The tourist has sometimes sunk low enough in his ignorance and unsympathetic irreverence, but surely he has not sunk so low as to countenance such desecration of two of the most sacred places on the earth.
