A Sale of Bedsteads AT COST And Why

We intended handling furniture, but on account of the amount of space required, which would interfere with our rapidly growing business in other lines, we have decided to sell off the bedsteads on hand (which consist of brass and white enamel) at cost --- the greatest bargain ever offered in this line of goods.

The sale will be short, but if you do not require one before May 1st we will store it free of charge. Come and examine at once before the best selections are made.

Death Follows The Surgeon's Knife

Surgery is the fad in medical treatment, and many doctors still recommend a surgical operation for piles. Too often the results are fatal to the patient and even when the operation is a success there is not always a cure.

CHARLIE'S AUNT PROVES SUCCESS

Record Audience Packs Opera House to Witness One of the Most Uproarious Comedies Ever Seen Here.

The first full week of the Helen Grayce company's engagement, opened last night when Charlie's Aunt, was introduced to a St. John audience.

One of the largest audiences of the year witnessed the performance of this great English comedy. Long before the hour for the curtain every seat in the main auditorium was taken, and in the upper portion of the house there were but few vacant chairs.

Much has been written of this great comedy. A popular piece in the states for a number of seasons, the news of its recent revival in London was heard with pleasure by all. Although some time has elapsed since it was first recognized as a success, the play continues to be popular wherever it is produced.

The aim of the author seems to have been to crowd as much comedy into three acts as possible, and one marvels at the success attained. Scarcely a scene begins when an undercurrent of laughter is perceptible, and before the first curtain falls mirth has broken all bounds and runs riot. All through the three acts of the piece the audience is convulsed with laughter as the entanglements multiply and each successive situation more ludicrous than the preceding one, adds to the complication.

The piece is a comedy pure and simple without a vestige of a plot, merely a series of humorous situations, at times verging on the ridiculous. Dona Lucia D'Alvador, Charlie Wykeham's aunt, is to visit him at St. Olaf's, Oxford, but as she fails to put in an appearance, it is imperative, for certain reasons that the fact of her non-appearance be suppressed. To do this, the task of impersonating the absent aunt devolves upon Lord Francourt Babberley, another undergraduate. Up on the complications which arise from the deception the story of the play is founded.

The play was presented in the capable manner which has always characterized the Helen Grayce company. The piece served to emphasize the remarkable versatility of the members of the company, especially was this the case with Edwin Abbey, who has formerly appeared in roles of an entirely different nature. All the members were seen to good advantage in their respective parts, sharing the honors of the evening. Miss Grayce was pleasing in the role of Kitty Verdum, although the requirements of the part were not sufficiently great to call for a display of her real powers.

The role of the pseudo Charlie's Aunt was handled by Frank Bestish who had the centre of the stage during the greater part of the play. Although at times he showed a tendency to slightly overdo the part, his work throughout was good, and he kept the audience in convulsions.

The piece will be repeated this afternoon and evening when it is expected that record audiences will take advantage of the offering.

Mr. McLaughlin was born seventy-one years ago in Saint John, N. B. His father was a railroad builder and took his family to Hartford when he built the first railroad in Connecticut.

When Mr. McLaughlin came to this city he became a reporter on the old New York Star, and in twenty-five years' service rose to be publisher. Later he started the New York Journal, which he sold. He also published the New York Metropolis. He was Supervisor of the City Record under Mayor Grant, and was assistant treasurer of the National Democratic Committee in the 1896 campaign. Mr. McLaughlin was a noted writer on political topics and in great demand as a campaign speaker.

Four years ago he had a paralytic stroke and though he recovered he

A STEGOSAURUS IS FOUND IN ARGENTINE REPUBLIC

Buenos Ayres, April 9.—The farmers in the surrounding country have for some time past been perplexed by the manner in which their cattle have mysteriously disappeared night after night, and although organized hunts for the thief have been going on for some time, nothing could be found that would give the slightest clue to the identity of the nightly visitor.

Among some of the farmers it was thought that the thief was a bear of gigantic size, while others laid the blame upon wolves, although no traces of these animals have been found in this vicinity within the memory of the oldest inhabitant. The wolf theory was generally scouted, however, as it was pointed out that no trace of the animal killed could ever be found and if wolves were guilty, the mutilated carcass of the cow would be found in the morning.

The only clue to the identity of the murderer was the immense foot-prints of some titanic animal which to judge from the spoor, must at least be 25 feet long and 10 feet wide. The trail of the murderer was followed several times to the bank of the river where it always disappeared and no trace of it could be found on the night of yesterday when Jesus Gomez, one of the backland farmers who had been a heavy sufferer by the depredations of the beast, caught sight of an animal so enormous that for some minutes he could not believe his eyes.

The farmers, however, on hearing his story decided that it would be necessary to send to town for a company of militia, which was accordingly done. On the arrival of the soldiers, all the men in the settlement turned out with their rifles and the company started for the mountain it numbered about 500 men. They did not have to journey to the den before meeting the monster, however, as on entering a narrow valley a terrific roar that shattered the nerves of the bravest was heard and there plunged into view an animal so enormous and fearful that great numbers of the men aimed and two died of heart failure.

Not waiting for his human enemies to fire the beast at once rushed to the attack and was met with a wailing volley that apparently did not harm it in the least as it continued on its way carrying death and destruction with it.

The monster's mode of fighting was peculiar, as it made no attempt to bite its enemies, but as soon as it came within range it would swing around and lash its tail from side to side. This fearful weapon was covered with a kind of armour greatly resembling the hide of a hippopotamus and projecting upward from it were six sharp prongs of ivory, a blow from which would spell death to the largest animal of modern days.

When the brute rushed among the soldiers their closely packed ranks put them at a great disadvantage as many as ten men being killed at a blow. How many of the men would have escaped alive will never be known as just when the brute was about to repeat its attack one of the soldiers fired a lucky shot penetrating the creature's eye, causing its instant death.

The survivors of this terrible fight at once proceeded to bind up their comrades' wounds and to count the dead which numbered 135, while upwards of 200 had received serious wounds.

When the news of the battle reached this city the greatest excitement prevailed, especially among the scientists, many of whom at once started to the scene of the fight where, after mature consideration, they pronounced the beast to be a descendant of the Stegosaurus, a species of the gigantic animals that roamed the earth in the early ages.

That this animal could not have lived through all the years since that period was evident to the scientists and for a time they were at a loss as to how the Stegosaurus could have survived without before making its presence known. The mystery was, however, finally cleared up by one of the older men who asserted that his great grandfather had seen one of these animals when on a distant hunting trip into the far interior. He stated that his great grandfather who at the time was but a boy of fifteen years had one day wandered away from the camp and lost his way.

Determining to find out more of the country in which he found himself the boy stated that his ancestor had remained away from the camp for several days and it was during this time he saw the Stegosaurus. The boy with which this titanic animal had inspired him was such that he at once rushed back to his father's camp where his tale was taken to be a story concocted to escape punishment for running away. However, it would seem that the boy's story had been true and that one of the brutes had wandered down country only to meet his death, but not before it had taken an awful toll of human lives.
