

MANCHESTER GIVES GREAT WELCOME TO SIR GEO. FOSTER

Frequent Applause Punctuates Fluent Oration by Canada's Minister of Trade—Bar Out Germans Until They Re-pent in Sackcloth and Ashes.

London, July 12.—(Montreal Gazette cable)—Manchester gave a warm welcome to Sir George E. Foster, who was the principal speaker at a great meeting tonight, his subject being "Empire Trade." The meeting, which was held under the chairmanship of Lord Derby, had a special significance, being held in the historic Free Trade Hall, famous in the annals of the northern city as the platform where such men as John Bright and others of the Manchester school of politicians had expressed their principles. Tonight's meeting was arranged jointly by the Conservative and Liberal organizations, indicating the truth of Sir George Foster's statement that many prejudices had been burnt away and much intolerance dispelled by the heat of war.

Calls Lord Lansdowne's Speech in Lords, Tuesday, a Declaration of War on the Irish People.

London, July 12.—John Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalists, today issued a statement characterizing the speech of the Marquis of Lansdowne in the House of Lords on Tuesday as a declaration of war on the Irish people. He said also that the speech was a breach of faith, appearing in violation of the intention of wrecking the negotiations for a compromise.

Hundreds of Visitors in Town for Occasion—Big Parade, Sports and Patriotic Addresses.

When the procession formed at one o'clock there must have been between three and four thousand people in the town. Two lodges from Deer Island, one from St. Stephen, one from Musquash, one from Penfield, three from St. John and the St. George lodge were in the procession, which reached the whole length of Main street. Headed by County Master James Monahan on the white horse they marched around the town and out to the baseball grounds where the Monahan were made. Two bands, Short's military band and the Deer Island band added to the success of the occasion. After the speeches a game of baseball was played between Milltown and St. George and was won by Milltown. A very exciting horse race took place between Jay Wilkes, owned by Hazen McGee, Harry Fearless, owned by George Veasey, Harry Jack, owned by W. W. Waite, and Ohio Peru, owned by E. A. Greenway. Jay Wilkes and Harry Fearless trotted first and Wilkes was the winner. Then Happy Jack and Ohio Peru were met to decide the winner and Wilkes won. The speaker of the day was Col. Guthrie, who was the principal speaker, received a most enthusiastic reception. County Master Monahan presided and introduced the speakers who delivered a most interesting and patriotic address.

WAR MAKES TOWN BOOM.

Viewed from the commercial aspect, the old adage, says the Louisville Times, might well be changed to "War hath her victories no less renowned than peace." Everybody is familiar with the industrial activities of various branches of the business, and probably few are acquainted with the fact that the European war has made a flourishing city out of a sleepy seaport on the north coast of Russia.

Archangel, the city situated by the gigantic conflict, looks toward the pole across the bleak Arctic Ocean. Beyond being a good port, the town never was noted for much except severe frigidity. With the outbreak of the war and the closing of many European ports, Archangel became of strategic importance.

Ships from lands which had never sent a vessel to Archangel now come laden with strange wares, for the war has created new channels of trade in the Russian Empire. The population has grown until one could almost call the neglected port a "boom town." The number of vessels coming and going last summer almost rivaled the record of New York, and an increase is expected this summer. The shipments of wheat are colossal and the imports cover many articles hitherto unknown to the custom officers. An electric street railway system has been installed and real estate is soaring.

The fate of the war boomed city at the termination of hostilities is a matter of conjecture, but it is hardly likely that the commercial position which the town has achieved within the last year and a half will ever be sacrificed.

GERMANY FAILED TO STIFLE HER SOUL

Their Traditions Trampled Upon and Outcasts in Public Life, Alsations Have Little Love for Huns.

Jules Bois, French poet, dramatist, and journalist, who came to the United States with the sanction of his government on what he called a "mission of sentiment," who is giving and plans to give, lecture courses at American universities, cast new light recently on one of the problems which has more than any other part of France, the French people. His subject was Alsace and Lorraine, provinces captured but not conquered, he says, in forty-five years, and spiritually still dangers of the France to which they gave themselves voluntarily in the reign of Louis XIV.

It is the belief of M. Bois that Alsace and Lorraine have deserved to be French, have proved their loyalty more than any other part of France. For they have endured persecution, separation, attempts to Prussianize them and their children and still their thoughts turn to France. Men from their territories in Alsace and Lorraine, says M. Bois, have fought for France in the world and is bearing its burden and giving its lives in the war against Germany. It is they who conquered Morocco for France.

The restitution of this organic part of France will be one of the demands of the Allies upon the Teutonic Powers, and the Allies, says M. Bois, will be prepared to fight to the bitter end, until this demand is conceded.

Part of German's Brain.

"Alsace has never succeeded in Germany," said M. Bois, "it has not contributed to the German personality. She is for Germany merely an increase in territory, a reason for selfish joy in conquest. Germany has not known how to make use of her nor to profit by her distinctive qualities. Alsace has given Germany neither great writers, nor statesmen, nor great military men.

"In France, on the other hand Alsations have always succeeded. Even after her annexation by Germany, Alsace gave France, of her own accord, valorous soldiers, thinkers, and statesmen. The newspaper Le Temps, the most esteemed paper in France, was founded by an Alsatian. The first man to speak for Dreyfus was the French Senator, Scheurer-Kestner, an Alsatian by birth. One of the noted French writers of the day is Edouard Schure, a pure Alsatian.

"Mentally, Alsace belongs to France as well as by sentiment. She is part of France's brain in her slow and steady manner of thought, she has always been a factor which made for mental equilibrium, which might be disturbed were the southern and lyric influence allowed to predominate.

"The Alsations, like the Bretons, are almost pure Celts. They have the imaginative temperament and the ironic vein of the Celtic race, and are more closely allied to the people of Wales than to any other nationality. They cannot be understood under German rule. They do not sympathize with the German method, its relentless logic of power. And, furthermore, there is no future for them, individually, under German rule. Their arentions and their attachments trampled on, their traditions are not respected, and, in public life, they are outcast.

55th CHAPTER OF ISAIAH

One of the greatest chapters in the entire Bible is the 55th Chapter of Isaiah—Old Testament or New. Nowhere else a greater confidence in God's loving kindness; such a message to humanity of His mercy and forgiveness; such a statement of His Divine Fatherhood and our own common brotherhood. It is a hymn of praise and thanksgiving, a testimony of rejoicing to the humblest as well as the greatest of affairs and of life, and a bond and surety of the life to come. It ought to be read frequently, as well the whole of Isaiah. The text in the Big Print Red Letter Edition is so clear, so easy on the eyes, that elderly people say it is a pleasure beyond ordinary words to describe, to sit down and read from its pages. The coupon, elsewhere in this issue, shows how simple it is to acquire this life-time treasure.

Garden Party Postponed.

Threatening weather yesterday morning caused the postponement of the local "Garden Party," which was to have taken the form of a garden party at East St. John and for which rather elaborate preparations had been made. It will be held today.

Arrested for Fighting.

James Ramsey and Daniel Walsh were arrested on the Haymarket square yesterday afternoon on the charge of fighting together.

Never Heard Such a Proposal.

Never heard such a proposal favorably received by the Alsations. Besides the state would necessarily be so small that it would fall a prey to the first to attack it in case of hostilities. Consider the fate of Luxembourg, which is a buffer state of that type.

Little is to be Hoped from German Socialists.

Little is to be hoped from German Socialists, upon whom we were at first disposed to rely for just consideration of the problem of Alsace and Lorraine. But their declarations in Vorwarts, urging that the provinces be kept as an integral part of Germany, prove that force alone can open Germany's eyes. Before the war, although the oppression of Alsace and Lorraine was painful to us, and our sympathies went out to the unhappy people, we restrained ourselves. Never would we have thought of making their restoration to France the occasion of a war.

But now that war has come, we shall insist on this measure of justice.

Victory of the Allies is necessary to its accomplishment, and we shall fight a year or two years, or three, until our object is attained. For peace will not be tolerable if it is not sustained by justice.

Buffer State Not Favored.

There has been talk of forming a buffer state of Alsace and Lorraine. I

HERE AND THERE

Discharged women prisoners will have a haven to go to when the Essex County Home for Discharged Women Prisoners at 239 Mount Pleasant Avenue, Newark, is opened. The building is an old homestead that has been remodeled to accommodate the ex-convicts. They will be welcomed by managers, who will make it comfortable for them until such time as they obtain employment. This week the home will be thrown open to the public for inspection between the hours of three and five o'clock.

It was a woman, the wife of a Troy blacksmith, nearly a hundred years ago, who made the great invention of separable collars and cuffs for men's wear. The method of invention was simple. She saved herself much muscular exertion over the washday by cutting the collars off her husband's shirts and washing them separately. After this, the men of Troy only had to get up a business and commercial idea. "Now Troy makes 50 1/2 per cent. of all the collars and cuffs turned out in this country." Men have made all the money out of this business and nobody remembers that a woman invented the notion.

The average American woman, says Cameron Mackenzie, fails to give her husband's business. It proper place in the scheme of her life. Instead of recognizing it as the great essential that makes possible not only the luxuries but also the very bread and butter that goes into her capricious mouth, she is too apt to regard it as the Great Interference between herself and the things she desires. If she had known what a nasty thing business would turn out to be she would have married a professional man or a writer, she says to her intimates around the bridge table or across the baby carriage.
