A break of six miles occurred in the western railway Wednesday afternoon, with trains at each end of the break, and the mails have not reached St. John yet. A most energetic postal management!

The mails could not be got past those six miles of damaged rails and forwarded by the train in waiting! The agent in charge, we suppose, waited for instructions, instead of scouring the neighborhood for horses, oxen, or mules, to haul, carry, or drag, the mail bags over those six miles.
