

and by planning farm institute programs that shall include lectures for especially interesting and instructing the boys and girls from the farms.

Every high school should offer a course in agriculture, as well as in the college preparatory studies, business, and manual training for those who prefer it. The above is simply suggested to open the way for discussion concerning the best methods of giving agricultural instruction in the public schools, and some better method will doubtless be devised.

But, we beseech you, good people, do not seek to add to the labors and expenses of the already over-burdened, poorly paid public school teachers.

Happy Thoughts.

Set up a standard for morality. Be a good neighbor as well as a good farmer.

In the school of experience there is no vacation time.

A man is never too old to learn, a boy never too young.

Turn the crop into money, turn the money into the bank.

Great things are yet to be accomplished by just farmers.

Good luck has the habit of meeting the man who is always on time.

A man should put off everything which has a tendency to put him off the right track.

A contented wife makes a contented husband, and contented parents make contented children.

All things come to them who wait upon themselves. It is the only kind of waiting that brings results.

Grist.

Farming is poor business when the farming is poor.

The richest part of any manure is that which water will wash out.

Much labor and expense may be saved by planning ahead of time.

By using the drill for sowing the depth of covering is uniform and there is no loss of seed.

Never let the farm work or stock stand still or retrograde, but keep both progressing steadily.

The value of wood ashes in the orchard and of coal ashes on heavy wet clay can hardly be overestimated.

Turning Fence Posts.

Now comes the time for getting out fence posts, which will soon rot at or in the ground. To double, and more than double, the life of the post, get it 18 inches or more longer than hole is deep and fence it high. Then when the post rots off turn it upside down and get another life from it.

Paint Pays.

Of all the commodities serving the convenience of the modern property owner, there is none that gives a larger return on the investment than good paint. What clothing is to body paint is to a building. It makes us civilized and respectable and protects us against disease and decay.

The lumber in our houses is like the flesh of our bodies, subject to all manner of diseases. In the living tree the life-force enables it to withstand these diseases, but the deadwood in our houses requires artificial protection or it will become a prey to the innumerable microscopic plants and animals whose work we call decay.

A well-painted house which is repainted as often as it becomes necessary, should last practically forever, and besides adding to the self-respect of the owner is worth to him at any time in dollars and cents more than it would be worth if he allowed it to deteriorate through neglect.

Painting today is so simple, so easy and so inexpensive that it is a matter for wonder that anyone with good money invested in buildings should be indifferent to this precaution. Good, efficient paint, ready for use can be bought in every first-class general store or hardware store throughout Canada, and using paint of this character, fifty or one hundred dollars will cover the price of material to keep any ordinary house well painted for twenty or twenty-five years. The price of the painter's labor varies in different parts of the country, but is nowhere exorbitant, and if a good ready-mixed paint be selected for the work, his services should not be required more than once in four or five years, and then only a single coat should be necessary.

Supposing that it costs as much as three hundred dollars (and the estimate is liberal) to keep a house properly painted for twenty years, the average annual cost is only fifteen dollars a year, of which total the cost of the paint itself will be less than one-third.

Anyone who has had experience with carpenters' bills due to parsimony with paint will realize at once that paint pays.

Gripes cripple the feet and make walking a torture, yet sure relief in the shape of Holloway's Corn Cure is within reach of all.
